Dear Mr. Weisberg,

It was very nice speaking with you this morning. In this day of Watergate and all, I find it hard to believe there is someone out there with your courage and (you should pardon the expression) spunk, fighting the fight that so many have either forgotten or dismissed.

I must apologize for having misled you on the point about the price of your book being in the Free Press article. As you now see, it was not. I merely glanced at the article and ran. My life out here has been hectic, and my time has been very limited. I picked up the Free Press on the street, being interested in the "Assassination" headline.

If I may, I would like to make a suggestion. Tom Snyder, last night, had as his guest for the Tomorrow Show, a certain congressman from New York, and they were discussing the assassination of Robert Kennedy, and the evidence of more than one gun in the kitchen in 1968. What I found most important about that show was that Tom Snyder and the congressman admitted to having been closed minded in the past when it came to such subjects as the controversy surrounding the Warren Report. It seems, or so they said, that Watergate opened their eyes to the fact that things such as you and I both know happened in the government surrounding the Dallas incident can happen — can really happen — without we, the public, knowing or approving.

Mr. Snyder seemed really turned on to the fact that he could now allow his mind to believe that all was not well with "the single bullet theory", among other things. Now, with your new book out, would be an excellent time to get on the Tomorrow Show. It comes from New York now, so it would be that much more convenient for you. I hope to see you there soon.

I think I told you this once before, but I feel so strongly about it, that it must be repeated. I sincerely believe that your courage will not go unheralded. The day will come when the truth will will out, and your fights with the government, the press, and the ignorant apathy of the public will be applauded. Please send me your book. I'm looking forward to reading it and hearing from you.

Sincerely,
