May Catholics Be Masons?

By REV. JOSEPH I. MALLOY, C.S.P.

FREEMASONRY, as we know it, began in the first quarter of the eighteenth century. The first Grand Lodge was organized in England in 1717. Twenty-one years later Pope Clement XII issued a Bull of excommunication entitled "The Condemnation of the Society of Conventicles de Liberi Muratori, or of the Freemasons." The reasons for the condemnation may be summarized as follows:

(1) Freemasonry has a peculiar "unsectarian," naturalistic character, by which theoretically and practically it undermines the Christian faith, first in its members and through them in the rest of society, creating religious indifferentism and contempt for orthodoxy and ecclesiastical authority.

(2) The inscrutable secrecy, and the oaths of secrecy and fidelity to Masonry and Masonic work, cannot be justified in their scope, their object, or their form, and cannot, therefore, induce any obligation.

(3) Such societies involve a grave danger for the security and tranquillity of the state and for the spiritual health of souls.

From the time of Clement XII seven Supreme Pontiffs of the Catholic Church have repeated the condemnation of Freemasonry for substantially the same reasons.<sup>2</sup>

It is worth noting that other Christian churches also object to Masonry. In fact up to sixty years ago most of them did. Even at the present day "between orthodox Lutheranism and the large rationalistic section of Germanic Masonry the mutual antipathy is strong, not to say bitter, as represented, for instance, by the radical 'Humanitarian' Grand Lodges and the aggressive Verein deutscher Freimauer." <sup>3</sup>

But if this type of anti-Catholic bigotry is confined to Latin countries, why object to Masonry here in the United States? Is it not unfair to hold American Masons responsible for what is said and done by European or Mexican Masons?

Of course it would be, but we do not hold them responsible. Nevertheless, they belong to the same organization. It is true that in the past, Lodges in England and in this country have repudiated the philosophy of their brethren in France, and have condemned their atheism and irreligion. But there is a decided drift the other way at least among the Masons of the Scottish Rite in this country. In 1917 the

As for the members of other religious orders, if they are aliens or naturalized citizens, they are likewise to be expelled, and if they are natives, they must return to secular life, or at least may not live in community, and shall not be allowed to exercise the teaching profession or intervene in any way in education." <sup>6</sup>

What has been done during this year, 1926, in Mexico, seems to follow quite literally along the lines of the Portuguese Constitution of 1910. "The Mexican Constitution of 1857 was largely the work of Masons, while the more recent Constitution promulgated February 5, 1917, apparently with Masonic approval and co-operation, is in its politico-religious sections almost identical with the Portuguese—only more so!" The laws of Calles in 1926, go even beyond the provisions of the Constitution of 1917.

The story of Masonry in France is well known. "In 1893 the Convention or general meeting declared that none were eligible for the Council of the Order—which serves as its Executive—unless they had pledged themselves to abstain from all religious rites. themselves and their dependents. And it has been repeatedly asserted, as by Mayoux and others, that no orthodox believer, Catholic, Protestant, or Jew, could be a sincere Freemason in France." And, in this world crisis Unfortunately, it is likewise true that even in the writings of American Masons, and in such Masonic magazines as The New Age, referred to above, and The American Freemason, for Blue Lodge members, we find ample evidence of antagonism to Catholic Christianity. Particularly is this true of the Sottish Rite. This branch of American Freemasonry admitted responsibility for sponsoring the anti-parochial school bill in Oregon in 1922. Its paper, The New Age, constantly publishes vicious diatribes against the Catholic Church.

The "true" meaning of Masonic symbols is not the one usually assigned by Christian believers, but rather is to be found in the pagan mysteries, or in pre-Christian religions. (See quotations given by Preuss on this subject, "American Freemasonry," pages 45-52.) Furthermore, when we find the authenticity of the Gospels and the Divinity of Jesus Christ treated as they are by representative Masons, it must also be clear to anyone that when men say there is nothing offensive to Catholicity in Masonry, they either do not know the Catholic Church, or they do not know Masonry. Albert Pike writes as follows:

"Jerusalem . . . had at length in its turn lost the Holy Word, when a Prophet, announced to the Magi by the consecrated star of Initiation (note the Masonic interpretation), came to rend asunder the worn veil of the Temple, in order to give to the Church a new tissue of legends and symbols that still and ever conceals from the profane and ever preserves to the elect, the same truths." <sup>14</sup> The Elect, of course, are Masons; the truth of the Gospels hidden in its "legends and symbols" cannot be perceived by the "profane," i.e., those who are not Masons.

"This is the New Law, the Word for which the world had waited and pined so long; and every true Knight of the Rose (the Rose Croix degree), will revere the memory of Him Who taught it, and look indulgently on those who assign to Him a character far above His own conceptions or belief, even to the extent of deeming Him divine." The very cornerstone of Orthodox Christianity, Catholic and Protestant, is the Divinity of Christ. What fellowship can we hold with those who look upon us "indulgently" for this belief which is an essential part of our Christian faith? But it is of the very nature of Freemasonry to be "broad" in its religious philosophy. Masonry propagates no creed," says the same author, "except its own most simple and sublime one taught by Nature

Perhaps we can see now why Pope Clement XII accused the fraternity of having an unsectarian, naturalistic character. A Catholic of the twentieth century cannot agree (and remain a Catholic), that the truth of his religion became "obsolete" in the fourth or fifth century. A Protestant, if he is logical, should not remain a Protestant, if Protestantism has "deteriorated."

The question whether or not Masonry is a religion is much disputed by Masons themselves. We have seen at any rate, that Masonic literature has decided views on religion, and pretends to interpret religion. Surely no Catholic will have his religion interpreted for him except by those whom he believes are divinely appointed to do so. We believe that our Church has been founded by Jesus Christ, the Son of God, that He delegated His teaching authority to a group of men who speak in His Name with infallible certainty.

This much we are sure of: that Masonry has the outward semblance of a religion; and that it has an elaborate ritual in large part couched in religious terms. We know, too, that for hundreds of men, Masonry is the only religion they practice; they say so: "Masonry is religion enough for us."

Some little light is thrown on this phase of the subject by a case brought before the Court of Appeals of New York, in 1905. Robert Kopp, one time Master of the Lodge of Strict Observance, No. 94, was ex-

The truth in its earliest ages, but it became obsolete, and Another short paragraph from Morals and Dogma

This is the idea stated over and over again by representative Masonic writers, not only in Italy, France and Mexico, but in these United States. "Masonry is The Truth." You may be a Christian, a Hindu, a Jew, a Mohammedan,—any religion is "true," when interpreted in terms of Freemasonry.

It seems clear, therefore, that the position of the Catholic Church on the question of Freemasonry is quite justified on the religious issue alone. Whatever may be the views of individual Masons, even hundreds of them, however friendly whole groups of them may be to the Church, Freemasonry, as a Society, as a System, is antagonistic to the first principles of the Church. This is clearly shown by the official declarations of the Lodges, and the publications of representative Masons.

If it is true that Masonry has a creed "so thoroughly religious in character that it may well be compared with the formally expressed doctrines of many a denominational church," then there is precisely the same reason why a Catholic may not be a Mason, as there is that a Catholic may not be a Lutheran or a Baptist,—if he wishes to remain a Catholic.

Three fundamental objections may be made to an oath of this kind kind: (a) Masonry has no right to impose it; (b) the candidate binds himself to secrecy as regards things not yet made known to him; (c) no one has the lawful right to impose the sentence for breaking the oath.

The principles of Catholic teaching about oaths are very simple. There is a Command of God that we must not take His Holy Name in vain, and therefore the Church insists that certain conditions must be fulfilled before it is licit to take an oath. The first is, that we must give careful consideration to the necessity and utility of the oath, for to swear without a sufficient reason is obviously a "vain" use of God's Name. Then we must be sure of the truth of what we say; and, finally, if we promise something under oath, we must be sure we may lawfully do the thing promised.

The Masonic oath violates all of these principles

THE MASONIC OATH

The second reason given by Pope Clement XII for his condemnation of Masonry in the eighteenth century was the inscrutable secrecy and the oaths binding to this secrecy practiced in the Fraternity. The oath of secrecy "still remains an integral part of the system of Freemasonry; indeed, it is renewed in varying forms in the initiation ceremony of each successive degree. Through Clement XII's Constitution and the Bulls of many subsequent Pontiffs the Church pronounces such an oath to be immoral in principle. It is imposed by an authority which has no adequate sanction, differing in that respect from the oath exacted, for example, by a magistrate, a judge, or an ecclesiastical superior who are in their varying degrees the representatives of the commonwealth or of God." 19

There are many societies which have secrets, and which the Church does not condemn. College fraternities have secrets. The Knights of Columbus have secrets. It is the nature of the oath of secrecy and the claim that it admits of no exception which make the Masonic oath objectionable. The following oath is taken from the manual of the English lodges: "I

What are those self-to absolute secrecy even as to things which "may Furthermore, a man cannot be sure of the truth

I quote him exactly,—"gave me quite a shock, for I had not dreamed that any Mason or body of Masons, or any publication concerning Masonry in the United States of America had ever been guilty of the sentiments mentioned." He had been of the opinion, as so many others are, that the Catholic Church was narrow because she woud not permit her members to became Masons, and that the Church entirely misunderstood Masonry. The fact is that it is Masons, many hundreds of them, who misunderstand Masonry.

One other statement in the last quotation from Albert Pike's book calls for a word of comment. He intimates that Freemasonry is very ancient; its secrets were hidden "centuries since, in the High Degrees." That is pure legend without a shred of history to support it. Most preposterous and extravagant claims have been advanced for the antiquity of the Fraternity. "We may trace this very institution," says Albert G. Mackey, "with an older but not dissimilar form, in the Masonic guilds of Europe; in the corporations of the Stone-masons of Germany; in the traveling Freemasons of the Middle Ages, and connect it with the Colleges of Architects of Rome." 24

It is a slight strain on one's credulity to be asked to believe that the Builders' Guilds of the Middle Ages, which erected the magnificent Gothic Cathedrals of Europe, that produced the Mystery and Morality Plays to give expression to faith in God's Revelation and their love for Jesus Christ and the Masons to imagine that all is contained in the Blue Degrees; and who so attempts to undeceive them will labor in vain, and without any true reward violate his obligations as an Adept. Masonry is the veritable Sphinx, buried to the head in the sands heaped round it by the ages." <sup>23</sup>

Here are some illuminating statements truly. "The mass of those called Masons are the thousands of lodge members in the lower degrees who have no interest in going higher; they art content that they have been admitted to the Fraternity and are entitled to call themselves Masons. But "they are intentionally misled by false interpretations," and therefore know not what their brother Masons in higher degrees know, and these latter violate their oath if they try to enlighten them. Masons are very apt to become indignant if we tell them they do not know what Masonry means. The greatest Masonic authority that ever lived in the United States says this is so, and we believe he knows what Masonry means.

A personal experience may give point to this statement. In a friendly discussion with a man who was past master of a Lodge in New York and who had been a member of the Grand Lodge of the State, I called attention to some particularly violent attacks on the Catholic Church and on Religion in general, that had appeared in The New Age and in other Masonic publications. He was fair enough to say when he had verified my quotations, that what he read,—

Other Masonic writers claim King Solomon as their "first Most Excellent Grand Master!" <sup>25</sup> and there are still others whose theory it is "that the principles of the Pure or Primitive Freemasonry were preserved in the race of Seth!" <sup>26</sup> What is termed by some "the revival of Masonry in the eighteenth century" is really the beginning of speculative Masonry, the international society, that we are familiar with in our day. By their very nature, secret societies lend themselves to plotting, especially when they have a definite philosophy as Masonry has. We have already referred to the scandalous injustice perpetrated by the Grand Orient against Catholic officers in the French Army. Was that patriotism? Was it seeking the best interests of their country to prevent capable soldiers from securing positions of command and authority simply because they were not Masons? 30

Professor John Robison, a Mason of the more moderate English type, was so scandalize by what he had seen and heard in Continental Masonic Lodges that he wrote a book condemning them, entitled, Proofs of a Conspiracy Against All the Religions and Governments of Europe, in which he says: "Not only are secret societies dangerous, but all societies whose object is mysterious. The whole history of man is a proof of this position. In no age or country has there ever appeared a mysterious association which did not in time become a public nuisance." And again: "In every quarter of Europe where Freemasonry has been established the Lodges have become hotbeds of public mischief." 31

Right in our own day the activities of Continental Masons indicate a spirit that is a menace to the stability of European nations and international peace. In a recent article, Rev. Herbert Thurston, whom we have quoted above, says: "To anyone who will take the trouble to investigate the recent activities of con-

Have you ever wondered what these letters meant after a priest's name?

They are the first three letters of three Latin words, "Congregatio Sancti Pauli"—
"The Congregation of Saint Paul", better known as the Paulist Fathers. Saint Paul, a convert himself and one of the great convert-makers in the history of the Church, is the principal patron of the Paulist Fathers.

The Paulist Fathers are a society of American missionary priests founded nearly one hundred years ago in New York City by Father Isaac Hecker. His fondest hope was that one day our country would be a Catholic nation. Since 1858 the Paulist Fathers have taken a leading role in bringing their fellow-Americans to the knowledge and love of Jesus Christ. They have used every means available and have even pioneered in many new methods of spreading the faith and winning souls to Christ. To think of convert work in America is to think of the Paulist Fathers.
