Dear Jim,

my wife told me of your call this past Saturday when I'd gone to the local hospital to be cert in I was not having another congestive heart failure. I wasn't.

She also said you'd said you'd phone Tuesday, which is today.

It is not easy for others who can and do lead normal lives to understand the convoluted hours I keep. However, if I'm ~~asleep~~ asleep most of the time my wife will not wake me. However, those convoluted hours have made it possible for me to cope with two medical conditions about which nothing can be done for me and there has been the side effect of those strange hours helping me be more productive.

I now aim for being abed, out time, by five p.m. I'm up one a.m. and often cannot return to sleep. I try most of the time.

Feel free to call but please recognize that these strange hours are important to my health, which can use all the help it can get!

Best wishes,

Harold
