

Kennedy: The publisher's case

The American publisher of Mortal Error (see

Page 1) explains

his support for

Howard Donahue's

theory

Donahue's ballistic argument is the strongest yet put forward, and it accounts for all the essential data accounted for by the government theories plus a good deal more. More than that, his reconstruction explains many details from Dallas that no one has otherwise explained.

For those who wonder what Lee Harvey Oswald might have had in mind when he declared he was just a "party", Donahue's theory allows an answer that does not entail the likes of a New Orleans conspiracy (such as the one depicted in Oliver Stone's JFK): Oswald, thinking himself to be a lone gunman, nevertheless saw Kennedy killed by a shot he knew he did not fire. But he was the only one arrested. He did not know how they did it, but he was convinced, wrongly, that somehow he had been used.

Through all the examination of the technical factors at Dallas, we knew that we had not touched on the aspect of Donahue's thesis that would excite the greater scepticism: There were nine other people in that follow-up car. Why had none of them ever said anything? Did Donahue or Menninger ever ask them? Yes, they did. Or tried to.

As the potential publishers, we were intensely concerned about the matters that were not technical but human. We had to get our questions straight. What did the others around Hickey know? What did Hickey know?

SEATING PLAN OF THE SECRET SERVICE FOLLOW-UP CAR AND THE PRESIDENTIAL LIMOUSINE

We read the statements of the Warren Commission Report. The statements are startling in their variety of eye and ear witness accounts. The agents testify to hearing different numbers of shots, from different directions. Dealey Plaza was an echo chamber, reflecting cheering crowds, motorcycles, shots and cries of horror. To this was added the mind-scrambling, shock of seeing the president being shot.

Could the explosive sound of an AR-15 possibly go off within a few feet of these men and they not register it, or at any rate, believe it came from elsewhere? The strict answer is yes, it is possible. Since starting our investigation, we have heard numerous accounts of shooting experiences that corroborate that possibility.

More than that, we have heard two first-person accounts from people who themselves discharged a rifle and were unaware of it. Hickey himself might have in that most head-jangling moment of his life, fired his gun and never realised it. What the mind registers in a moment of such utter extremity is unpredictable. There were eye witnesses along Elm Street who claimed they heard a gunshot sound that originated right there in the Plaza. But others said no, it was from the grassy knoll. There were two shots, three shots, four shots. They all

Hickey himself might, in that most head-jangling moment of his life, have fired his gun and never realised it alike. No one sounded markedly different. They were evenly spaced in time. No, the last two shots were almost simultaneous.

It seems unlikely that his fellow agents and even Hickey himself would not be aware of the AR-15's going off, but the possibility exists. The government has never said if or when or by whom a post-event gun-examination was carried out. Inevitably we are pushed to consider the next possibility: that at least some others in the follow-up car were aware that the AR-15 went off. If they were aware, where did they think the shot went? In Donahue's reconstruction, Hickey, jumping to his feet on the soft seat-cushion of a moving car, tipped backward while clutching the AR-15. The chance of his accidental shots hitting the president probably seemed so remote that they never actually considered it. (Donahue, when asked why he immediately assumed the shot was accidental and not intentional, says that the chances of such a shot being planned and executed are so small that he could never take that scenario seriously. Asked if the chances of an accidental shot's hitting the president the head 24 feet away did not seem equally small, he says of course they do — until you consider the evidence. First, he points out, he didn't approach his investigation with any idea that it would lead to the AR-15. He considered the data, and the data pointed him to the follow-up car. You cannot convince any experienced shooter — and certainly not one who as a firearms expert has regularly testified in court about bizarre coincidences that have produced gunshot fatalities, as Donahue has — that the apparent unlikelihood of the result of an accidental shot should be enough to persuade him it didn't happen.) If another agent knew the AR-15 went off, and he thought it went skyward, just possibly he would judge it an irrelevant but potential nasty complication to any subsequent investigation, and thus not worth mentioning. We can know none of this — if anyone knew, who that anyone might be and what went through his mind.

Donahue and Menninger tried to know. A large part of Mortal Error recounts their efforts to contact the other car occupants, and, repeatedly,

George Hickey, the final decision to publish, we felt we had to make our own efforts. On November 1, 1991, we wrote to George Hickey. We said that we were going to publish. We told him that the book was premised on Donahue's contention that the behaviour of the bullet in the president's skull was much more consistent with that of a bullet fired from an AR-15 rifle than from a Mannlicher-Carcano rifle, such as the one used by Oswald and on an analysis of the trajectory of the bullet. We told Hickey that Donahue was by no means accusing him of any wrongdoing. We emphasized Donahue's belief that the president would in all likelihood have died from the wound caused by one of Oswald's shots even if the bullet in question had not hit the president in the head. We urged Hickey to put forward his side of the story. He did not respond.

We do not unanimously feel that Donahue has proved his AR-15 case beyond a shadow of a doubt. His conviction is strong but we cannot say his argument absolutely precludes the possibility that he is wrong. Our own search was begun in an effort to uncover anything that might disqualify that argument. We now feel that Donahue's command of the facts of Dealey Plaza are the strongest that we have seen, and if we cannot be certain it may be because of a natural reluctance to concede that such bad luck, so unlikely and chaotic an accident, can prevail in this world. But to disbelieve solely because it was a long shot is its own species of irrationality.

THOMAS MCCORMACK

7, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100