In Washington, meanwhile, the Federal Aviation Administration disclosed that Fidel Castro reportedly praised the airline pilot and assured him the hijackers would be treated as criminals.

An FAA spokesman said the information came secondhand, at an FBI-conducted Miami debriefing of the crew.

Even though the three men who hijacked the Southern

Airways DC-9 after takeoff from Birmingham, Ala., last Friday many face harsh treatment in Cuba, U.S. authorities are seeking their prompt return - along with their reported $2 million ransom-for prosecution in American courts.

At the Miami debriefing, Southern pilot Bill Haas reported on a conversation with Castro at Jose Marti Airport in Havana, after the hijackers had been detained.

Haas had taken the plan off from McCoy Air Force base, Orlando, Fla., in a hail of FBI bullets that flattened four tires, and then flew it unaided to Cuba after the hijackers shot copilot Billy Johnson, mayor of College City, Ark.

Castro told Haas, the FAA said, that the hijackers were desperados and would be confined as such.

Castro also complimented the pilot on the landing that saved the lives of all aboard 27 passengers, the four crew members, and the hijackers.

The FAA investigation of the hijacking seeks particularly to find out why passenger and baggage screening procedures at Birmingham failed at least to provide warning of the weapons, if not pinpointing the three men as potential sky criminals.

The FAA declined to comment on details of its study.

However Benjamin O. Davis, assistant secretary of transportation for safety and consumer affairs, said the FAA had told him the three hijackers were selected for special screening as they pre-pared to board the plane, through application of the FAA hijacker profile.

Davis said the men were allowed to board after going through a weapons'- detection check that failed to turn up

At a transportation conference in Merida, Mexico, Secretary of Transportation John A. Volpe said plane hijackings have been reduced in the United States but will never be eliminated.

As of two months ago, Volpe said there had been nine successful hijackings in 30 attempts this year. In 1969, he said, 34 out of 40 attempts were successful.
