

Washington Post Staff Weiter

The assistant Senate Majority Leader, Robert C. Byrd (D-W.Va.), urged yesterday that Congress undertake a fundamental review of the operations and functions of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and perhaps remove the FBI Byrd pointed out, "we oohed from the Department of Justice.

At a minimum, Byrd said, Congress must establish "statutory authority" for the budomestic intelligence gathering. This controversial justifed solely on the basis of job, could expect no such the President's inherent executive powers.

Byrd's proposals, the most sweeping to date in the new for "oversight" of the FBI, came as he spent the entire day questioning Clarence M. Kelley, "President Nixon's nominee to becomes director of the bureau.

A long-time supporter of J. Edgar Hoover, who was FBI number of key issues concerndirector for nearly half a cen- ing the FBI: tury until his death last year, Byrd led the successful opposition to the President's first FBI director-designate, L. Patrick Gray III.

The West Virginian is now reportedly in line to become term, so it is long enough to chairman of a new Senate Judiciary subcommittee, or of a short enough to discourage special committee, that would oversee bureau operations.

Kelley insisted yesterday that in his 21 years as an FBI investigative agencies, restrict agent, before he became police chief in Kansas City, Mo., in 1961, he "never felt uncomfortable" with the way the bureau was run or with the legal basis for its activities.

quickly cut in, "you worked gence data, including the icy for the FBI during the time question of reliance on infor-agre that it was headed by a very mants. unique man. . . . The respect for Mr. Hoover created a different atmosphere" from conditions prevailing today.

During Hoover's tenure, and aahed and were big-eyed" whenever he came to Capitol Hill. "His budget requests tion which would define FBI were sacrosanct. We gave him everything he wanted."

Byrd left no doubt that times had changed and that reau. activity has traditionally been Kelley, if confirmed for the treatment.

Congress has "an excellent opportunity - and one which it should seize - to determine congressional just exactly what the role of the FBI is and should be," view. Byrd declared, complaining that the bureau had been day, with Kelley striving to be questioned him. gate affair and Gray's tenure.

As the day wore on, Byrd pressed the nominee on a

· How to achieve "independence" for the director, so that he is not subject to pressure from an attorney general or president;

· How to limit the director's encourage independence but abuses of authority;

· How to govern the FBI's relationship with other federal its overseas operations and separate its various domestic functions from each other; and

· How to establish standards for the gathering, storage

If Byrd expected any commitments from Kelley, he got few, The nominee repeatedly asserted that he was unfamiliar with the questions or had "not thought" about them.

Kelley told Byrd that he had "no objection" to legislaactivities and that he considered congressional oversight "very desirable" for the

But a few minutes later. when Sen. Roman Hruska (R-Neb.) objected that the creation of statutory considerable would have "disadvantages," Kelley said witness chair again, to answer that he also agreed with that questions. He finally agreed that, after confirmation, he would review the transcript of the hearing and try to come back with answers to Byrd's questions.

No member of the Judiciary Committee has opposed the nomination thus far, and Byrd agrees that it should not be held up while Congress involves itself in FBI oversight.

But committee chairman James O. Eastland (D-Miss.) scheduled another session for Monday, when several witnesses from Kansas City, including a black civic leader opposed to Kelley, are schedpowers uled to testify.

Kelley will then take the any accusations and to spond to other committee So it went for most of the members who have not yet