

Hoover Kept Fu

By MARGARET GENTRY

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the years following John F. Kennedy's assassination, J. Edgar Hoover fumed over the mounting criticism of the FBI investigation of the case but decided to ignore most of the critics, at least publicly.

In private, he kept meticulous records on the critics' personal lives as well as their public comments about the bureau.

The details emerged from 58,754 pages of FBI files that the bureau made public Wednesday to comply with requests under the Freedom of Information Act.

The half-ton of documents, together with 40,001 pages released in December, comprise virtually all of the bureau's investigative files on the murder of the president Nov. 22, 1963, in Dallas.

This batch of files begins in mid-1964. Scores of letters and memos reflect the cool but polite relationship between the FBI and the Warren Commission as the commission launched its probe of the case.

Later that year, the commission was to report its conclusion that Lee Harvey Oswald killed Kennedy and that he acted alone. Hoover had arrived at the same belief months earlier.

However, a number of writers and ming by Critics

researchers were attracting considerable public attention with their theories that Oswald and the man who shot him to death in the Dallas police station, nightclub owner Jack Ruby, were part of some dark conspiracy of varying origins.

Nothing was found in the first batch of FBI files to disprove the Warren Commission's conclusion. The initial scrutiny of the second batch of files also yielded no startling new information.

What the material does show is the countless hours FBI men spent trying to document claims made by such critics as Mark Lane, Harold Weisberg, Edward J. Epstein and Dick Gregory in speeches, books and broadcast interviews.

An FBI official prepared a line-by-line analysis of a William Manchester article to be published in Life magazine. The bureau obtained tapes and transcripts of radio and television shows featuring the critics.

Such reports often set off debates within the FBI about how the bureau should respond. Should Hoover ignore the criticism or should he answer it? One published report criticized Hoover for failing to express condolences to the Kennedy family. The FBI issued a public statement saying that was false, and a later bureau memo called the public statement a successful strategy.

Disturbed about Gregory's attacks in 1964, one FBI official wrote to Hoover, "We have long suspected that Gregory is demented. Nevertheless, the comments he has made are utterly ridiculous and we should confront him and tell him in no uncertain terms that he better stop putting out such gutter talk." Hoover concluded that a confrontation would serve no purpose and vetoed the proposal.

Two years later, author Richard J. Whalen approached FBI officials to solicit cooperation in writing a magazine article answering critics of the Warren Commission.

William C. Sullivan, one of Hoover's top advisers, supported Whalen, calling him "reliable and trustworthy and has an extremely high opinion of the bureau."

"It appears that it would be in the best interests of this bureau to cooperate with Mr. Whalen in his efforts to bring the complete truth before the American people," Sullivan wrote. "Our investigation was sound, we have absolutely nothing to hide, and no critic has brought even one scintilla of evidence that would disprove our findings."

In the margins of the memo, Hoover scrawled, "Absolutely no. Again, an emphatic no. I am absolutely opposed."

Whatever the bureau's public response, there was no doubt about where the critics ranked with Hoover and other FBI officials in private. Memos refer to the "infamous Mark Lane, reportedly a communist sympathizer." Weisberg and Gregory are described in disdainful language.

The chairman of the Warren Commission, Chief Justice Earl Warren, was not spared Hoover's sharp tongue. In a 1964 memo, Hoover noted that he had told commission counsel J. Lee Rankin "that I had not appreciated what I had interpreted as carping criticism of the chief justice when he referred to the bureau's report originally submitted to the commission as being a 'skeleton' report."

A notation on an FBI memorandum dated Nov. 29, 1963, reports the initial refusal of Warren to head the commission. It says simply that Deputy Attorney General Nicholas Katzenbach "advised the chief justice had declined to head the commission."

Although the documents don't reflect it, before the day was out, President Lyndon B. Johnson had persuaded Warren to head the commission. Warren, who had been reluctant to take part in activities off the bench, told the story himself years ago.

Manchester's book quotes Warren as saying he accepted after Johnson told him his service was vital lest there be wild rumors and foreign repercussions that could even lead to war.

Another version of that story has it that Johnson finally overcame Warren's reluctance by telling him that he'd already announced the appointment of the chief justice.

The FBI files also show that the bureau and the Justice Department two years ago investigated to determine whether any FBI officials should be prosecuted for destroying assassination-related documents.

The probe centered on the destruction of a note that Oswald left with the Dallas FBI office several days before the assassination. Testimony before a House committee two years ago indicated that Oswald threatened the FBI in the note if it didn't stop questioning his wife. Other testimony described the note's destruction after Oswald was charged with Kennedy's murder.

There was no indication what the investigation concluded. However, no FBI official has been prosecuted for the incident.

He Didn't Like Garrison

By JOHN A. BARBOUR

WASHINGTON (AP) — J. Edgar Hoover, the late FBI director, developed an abiding distaste for New Orleans District Attorney James Garrison and his attempts to prove that President John F. Kennedy was the victim of a conspiracy.

FBI memos, released Wednesday, contained scrawled references to Garrison in Hoover's handwriting characterizing the controversial prosecutor as an "ego-maniac" and a "shyster." Garrison's investigation focused on the theory that Lee Harvey Oswald conspired with New Orleans sex deviates to kill Kennedy. There is no indication in the files that the FBI conducted an active investigation into Garrison's activities. It did, however, meticulously record volumes of derogatory data volunteered by informants, all of whose names were censored from the memos.

On one memo Hoover wrote: "More and more it becomes evident we should stay as far away as we can from this shyster."

In another he said, "I want no injection of the FBI into this farce. Already it is back-firing on Garrison and any action of ours can be twisted by this ego-maniac."

In still another, Hoover wrote: "I again stress I want no statements, whether on or off the record, made about the Garrison fiasco."

C. D. De Loach, a top FBI official, noted in a memo that then-U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark had relayed the fears of Rep. Hale Boggs, D-La., a member of the Warren Commission, that Garrison's allegations "might in some manner falsely involve the President (Johnson)." Clark said he hoped "the FBI was on top of this situation."

De Loach informed Clark that Hoover "had already instructed us to closely follow this matter." He also noted that Garrison "apparently desired to run for lieutenant governor and was attempting to engender as much publicity as possible for himself."

Hoover, in another memo the same month, February 1967, said, "See that our New Orleans office meticulously stays on top of this fiasco. It smells."

FBI informants were even more condemnatory of Garrison and his actions. He was characterized as a psychopath, supported by a wealthy New Orleans car dealer. They alleged that he had bought an expensive home and had spent $25,000 on furniture, despite the fact that he had entered public office "destitute."

Hoover waved away requests that the FBI enter the New Orleans investigation with the statement that it was outside of FBI jurisdiction and a matter for the state.

In orders to his special agents in charge, Hoover wrote in March 1967 regarding Garrison's investigation:

"All offices should continue to accept any information regarding the assassination; however, no investigation is to be conducted without bureau approval irrespective of the nature of the data furnished.

"Should pertinent information be received, which by necessity requires immediate investigation or other action, the bureau is to be notified either by telephone or teletype, depending upon the urgency of the situation."

Also in 1967, the FBI summarized all of the information it had on Garrison, omitting informants' names. It was two pages long and alleged connections with prostitutes and hoodlums.

It also noted: "He (Garrison) served as a special agent of the FBI from March 5, 1951, resigning on July 24, 1951, to enter military service. His services were considered satisfactory."

FBI Differed on Number of Shots

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI and the Warren Commission disagreed on a central element of the assassination of John F. Kennedy — as to how many shots hit the president and Texas Gov. John Connally.

Both concluded it was most likely three shots were fired and agreed Lee Harvey Oswald was the lone gunman in Dallas Nov. 22, 1963.

The commission concluded one shot went through Kennedy's neck and then wounded the governor. A second shot fatally struck the president in the head. The third missed, the commission said.

However, FBI files released Wednesday contain a handwritten note by then director J. Edgar Hoover regarding the bullets:

"We don't agree with the commission as it says one shot missed entirely and we contend all 3 shots hit."

The matter has been central to criticisms of the Warren Report because only one almost intact bullet was recovered at Parkland Hospital in Dallas and two fragments of what was probably another in the Presidential limousine. The critics have asked what happened, then, to the third bullet?

The movie made by an onlooker, Abraham Zapruder, indicate Kennedy and Connally were hit almost simultaneously. Critics doubt Oswald could have fired his bolt-action rifle quickly enough to hit both men with separate shots. They have also raised the question that if Oswald were marksman enough to twice hit his target area why would he have missed a third shot. They have speculated the existence of another assassin, a conjecture discarded by both the commission and the FBI.

The FBI memo that Hoover annotated discusses Connally's story in Life magazine that he thought he and the president were struck by separate shots.

The Warren Commission's findings say "one shot probably missed the car and its occupants. The evidence is inconclusive whether it was the first, second or third shot which missed.
