Please excuse my thick-headedness in not just making a copy of the second JAMA crap and sending it to you. It is enclosed. <sup>ing</sup> It did not occur to me that as of the last word I had you did not have it until remember to return the copy I'd borrowed, which because of a respiratory infection that lingers was unwise until today. (I see another doctor in the same building.)

To explain this fancy paper: during the 1973 energy crisis I became aware of how much energy is consumed in making paper so I saved/wasted paper with a clear side to reuse in drafts, etc. I've not idea how much energy I save<sup>d</sup> but I should have lengthened the life of a number of trees!

The book I've almost finished drafting, at least 200,000 words, is all on clear-sided paper. Wrong if retying it on his computer and as corrections are made and chapters retyped I've accumulated another two packages of paper. So, I'm using some of it.

Wrong is high on this draft. He has skimmed ahead of his retying.

I've sent him the last planned chapter save for conclusions but someone suggested a chapter on "new" evidence so I've started that. I've not yet decided what all to include but have decided that what I do include I'll handle fully enough to make that comprehensible even if it means leaving something else out.

Apologies!

Harold
