

Meachum also abuses a dangerous 'weapon' <sup>12/5/87</sup>

I have just finished reading Roy Meachums enlightening "Gun stories." I find it paradoxical that a nation, whose forefathers had enough foresight to place in its Constitution rights guaranteeing a free press and a citizens right to bear arms, has never generated enough genius of the people to get both typewriters and guns out of the hands of people who abuse the privilege of ownership. Both weapons can be very dangerous in the hands of megalomaniacs and especially dangerous when these people are provided a constitutionally protected fire base.

I want you to thank Roy for providing his definition of "Good Old Boy." Until he informed me that they were people who ride around in pickup trucks and shoot their relatives, I thought that they were the people I see at the firehouse, the American Legion and the VFW on Saturday and in church on Sunday; the same people who build everything, grow everything and provide the goods and services to allow the pseudo-intelligentsia time to write nasty stories about them.

Thanks to Roy's enlightening article and his crisp, clear diachotmies, pure Aryian thoughts, I am now able to understand how the Holocaust could have happened and the causes of Socialist revolution.
