Enough Rope

New ORLEANS District Attorney Jim

Garrison now seems to have paid out enough rope to hang his hare-brained, Kennedy-assessination theory high enough for even the most credulous theory high enough for even the most credulous to see it for what it is — a wildly improbable effort, for some arcane reasons of his own, to refute the reasoned findings of the Warren Commission.

True, he may have rounded up a classic collection of local weirdos — no great feet in any city. And let them recite some fanciful night-time party "plots" allegedly involving Lee Harvey Oswald, the presidential assassin the Warren Commission presents as a backst long. Commission presents as a kooky loner.

But recent developments in Garrison's probe are the final tipoff to the insubstantiality of his "case." Having failed to reconstruct any logical link between his bizarre band of suspects and the President's death, Mr. Garrison is casting about

He has called in for grilling others who happened to be named "Oswald." He is saying he thinks Oswald really may have been a CIA agent (which CIA long since has denied). And now he is trying to investigate both the CIA and the FRI.

For whatever motives and for however long Mr. Garrison keeps his show going, he will henceforth be playing to a largely empty house. He has exhausted the patience, credulity and attention of all but the most dedicated screwballs.
