

Left-Right Goff Gets a Job

^{2 in} ~~with~~ ~~renewal~~ ~~of~~ ^{PM 2/27/44}
Kenneth O. Goff, perennial juvenile, and ex-Communist turned contributor to Gerald L. K. Smith's The Cross and the Flag, has a new job. He's been chosen chairman of the National Youth Organization, formed to combat the Communist influence on U. S. youth.

The group was launched at Englewood, Col., by a delegation of 350 pastors and representatives of youth organizations. The rallying cry was sounded by the Rev. Harvey H. Springer, editor of The Western Voice, who has raised funds in behalf of Gerald B. Winrod, anti-Semitic Kansas publisher and one of the alleged seditionists now awaiting trial.

The organization was given a rousing send-off in Springer's Voice and Smith's magazine. Smith, Detroit rabble-rouser and national director of the America First Party, said the group would "combat the underground conspiracy being directed by the Communist Party among young people."

Goff joined the Young Communist League nine years ago as a "youth" and stayed with it four years. He must have absorbed a lot; in 1939 he told the Dies Committee all about the Communists, to the tune of 130 pages of testimony.

When Goff switched his stand, he went whole hog and became a contributor to Smith's and Springers' publications. For The Cross and the Flag (August, 1943) he wrote a confession entitled I Was a National Leader in the Communist Party, Now I Am a Christian.
