

Dear Pearl,

10/5/72

Sometimes I'm undiplomatic by accident, from tiredness, affliction or carelessness. More often it is for a purpose, right now to try to get your attention. You really have not been paying attention, and you say something astoundingly immature for an experienced (as the risk of accusation of male chauvinist piggery) newshen. That first:

"...how come a CBS newscaster said on the radio as Nixon was dining on shark's fins in China: Let's face it, Nixon made a great concession overlooking the quantity of drugs produced by China, which is the largest in the world."

I don't even care who the newscaster was (and they have some farout nuts of the most extreme right field on their "Spectrum" feature—I ~~had~~ heard two in succession not much after 5 a.m. today while I was shaving, and from Chicago yet!), the simplest answer is that he was just plain wrong. Does an experienced reporter have to be told that with the best intentions, which I would not ordinarily assume on a political story so grossly wrong and overtly prejudicial, this is everyday?

I'm much troubled by what is happening to you and to your thinking. Thus I did not ask you to take my word for any of this. I sent you a large assortment of different sources all uncontradictable and all saying the same thing, perhaps 3/4 of the world illicit supply comes from the Golden Triangle and NONE from the new China. If you understood the political philosophy that prevails there you'd know it has to be as close as anything can be to an impossibility. Much the same is true of Cuba, and all I've sent you says this, too. Now not one source that I've used is pro-Communist, pro-China or pro-Castro, is it? Some have been tested as few ever are. Example: McCoy's publisher submitted his ms to the CIA for refutation. When they proceeded after this knuckling-under, you know how little the CIA could or did say.

Pearl, you could pull that innocent gal reporter stuff, without the blinking eyes, on someone who doesn't know better, but for me you are too mature to go for this kind of foolish thinking, and that tells me it is NOT thinking. Not for the Pearl I think I know at least that much about. Naive? Hell, no; not in this case. I'm about as naive and trusting as they come, regularly putting myself in a position to be conned, but there is a limit. Trusting people is one thing. Not thinking at all is another. So, I deduce you are being and have been hoodwinked. Blink those li'l ol' gal's eyes all you want, I am not blinded by their attractiveness and I know they are in a damned good head. I'm not even trying to figure out why because I reached (dangerous method, admitted) an instinctive conclusion before and I've no time to just sit down and puzzle it out. Besides, enough is obvious so that if it isn't the whole answer, it is enough.

And about that you are very defensive, whether or not you so intended. Striso.

Pearl, I'm going to be 60 soon. In all these years I've learned how dependable my judgement is and that the few blunders are pretty big and, in retrospect, not often justifiable to myself. I formed an impression of Striso early enough and clearly enough for him to go away and leave me entirely alone. Besides, in the work I do I have to make spot determinations. Then, too, I draw upon an experience that lets me type people without conscious thought. He immediately fit a classic mold that nothing since has made me give any thought to changing. I could give you so many examples from your own letter(s). From this one on The Watergate Caper, "The Democrats picked up some stuff re Pigs (meaning Bay of) and the JFK killing which you have been working on. We may have a break in this election...." Rubbish! If they had picked up the impossible, the ONE place it would NOT be is in party hq and in O'Brien's or the state-liason's offices. More, what makes you think this was a simple bugging operation? Know how few people that takes in a pro operation, how little front money (and we are dealing in $$$ with a minimum of $124,000, easily $350,000)? This was a much larger scheme in which even the now-admitted robbery was still a small part. That also doesn't involve such still-large sums. I could go further but stop with this reminder: only the radical-right and the most dedicated "Nixonians" are pedaling that childish line. What is Striso the "Liberal" doing with it? You should hear Buckley on it. I enclose it so you can, and I've marked it to make it easier. Aside from the lies (one underlined, other double-marked, the complete implausibility of this sample of the output of the Dept of Dis-information can fall completely apart before the unsophisticate (which ain't you) by comparing with fact. "The McGovern people are not, then were not and never have been in the WC. Then their offices were near the capital, and were the separate object of attention, according all sources, including the indictment itself. When McG established national hq, theyx were and are at 1910 K St., NW (whole top of envelope address to me by an official of it enclosed).

This is radical-right/intelligence operation garbage, not anything better. It is stupid, so I believe the intelligence part is from its right-wing part, aimed same area, as its use shows. The radical right wants to believe this kind of stuff. Only nuts could.

You have not answered me on the utter impossibility of an independent Striso having any kind of "contact in Red China". That he puts it this way is self-disclosure, too. Face it, kiddo; he can't.

As I could perceive immediately, you affirm, "And this is what Striso has been feeding me." Pearl, Pearl, you are like a hotpants teenager who believes every sweetnothing she is told to get her into bed. God the kind of stuff you credited and still credit!

So, I ask you again, and in interests in which yours predominate, I'd like to see everything he has been feeding you. If you want any of it confidential and you do let me see it, please so mark. I'd recommend xeroxes, not originals, be sent. And I think if you don't want to get really loused up in a merchantable property that could also be one of other merit, you'll do it. I noted some of the rubbish in the RD piece, remember. Also, I'm doing something else I would not, ordinarily, do without asking you first. I'm sending a copy of your letter to friends who are more than merely experienced reporters and trusted friends but experts in the area in question, including being authentic experts on China, old and new, and this includes the language and the leaders (also old and new). With a carbon of mine. If they disagree with anything more than a typo, I'll let you know pronto. It will go out tomorrow and by the end of next week I'll have an answer. If you don't hear from me before the end of the following week, you know there is complete agreement. Depending on the nature of the answer, I'll send you a copy.

Please listen to poppa and stop worrying me!

And whaddaya mean, "If I ever write a book on Kaplan..." I don't think from what I saw of the Asinof touch the theft plus Kaplan will make a movie. I haven't changed my mind on a novel being the best approach, or non-fiction written like a novel. And you get closer to this in what I like, "from the viewpoint of a first person girl reporter visiting Kaplan in prison." Slight reformulation: not "girl" and not mother of two teenagers and not mature woman reporter. More like a young woman reporter, romantic herself, seeing romance in this grisly stuff and weird people, sympathetic to all the villainous heroes and heroines (not excluding the courva), and with the most explicit understanding of the heat, of all the bodies, and never leave Joel's pants. You can carry the message, the responsible writing and approach, best on this story by jazzing it up with all the commercial touches. And with the whore/second wife, make her beautiful inside and out, if she's neither. Write it as you say in part in "fun essay". Junk the essay and make enough to live on for a while. When you detach yourself, when you are comfortable (as you were not ~~at~~ the first day here, youx are exquisitely deft, charming in expression, and very, very funny. Remember I told you on the Cortes thing if you couldn't do it any other way, you should have an audience like me and a tape recorder? Write this book that way, like you were telling it to an appreciative audience and without thinking that any act or word could be an embarrassment to you. Use the words that sell today and people use in conversation now. (Our letters crossed on the Playboy thing, but I think I sent it in time for you to have gotten it by 10/1.)

The question you ask about court costs is one I've not solved. I have it in many cases, from publishers to wholesalers to truckers, and I thin at least three publishers. Law and justice are for the rich only. However, your agent ought to be of use here. Trouble is they have more than one client and have to sell to publishers, as I also learned. I have had one who gave up $3,500 without a whimper instead of doing what he owed me. But I'd ask Franz Furst and see what he says. Has he offered any opinion on the story, or does he know it only from the RD piece, whether or not revised?

If the book goes, you've got better prospects for recovery of damages. I think.

I think it is wrong to try to sell a mag piece, esp. now. I think the thing to do is write the book, or about 20 pages of it and then outline. Yes, I think if you write the book with a woman's mind, emotions and touch, a woman's mag will go for it. The whore is perhaps a bit daring at first blush (blush?) for such a market, but I think that if you could organize it with a chapter on her, as she sees and feels, it would include a number of socially useful things, including inherent commentary on the Mexican penal system and a very controversial thing in this country, in-jail heterosex. I think it would sell, especially when they have cheapened themselves to the point where they have naked, centerfold men. I really would try to organize the book so that one or more chapters can be lifted right out for mag use. This whole business could go here, including on TV. Jials and their problems, including sex, are much and often in the news and considered by sociologists and others. Offhand, I don't think you want to appear about the time their book does. If it gets attention, then the market possibilities will be better. If it gets attention, the lawyer may also be more interested (who is he?).

Despite your problems, you can do the book right now and, the other things you can do to make a living. If you organize yourself and your work. Won't be easy, esp. if the stuff you do is tiring. But you can. Best bet is something based on which Furst can get you an advance. Plan your book and write the opening.

You are right on not seeing Joel after the escape. And you don't have to solve it. It can titillate the reader. You are right in concentrating on Vidal, but not at the expense of the Kaplans. Treat V as though there is no doubt he is alive. Anyway, have you any solid reason to believe otherwise? No corpus delicti. And write the book to make a movie. If you mentioned getting in touch with Playboy, as I seem to recall, suggest not. If you had on paper what you could put there so beautifully I know two people I could approach in NYC, from the movie end if Furst doesn't work.

Put your head together on this. You've got what the Asinof rewrite can't, and you are aware of it to a degree from this letter alone. This is by its nature the kind of story that lends itself to honest commercial writing, that is, there is no conflict between honesty and what is commercial, and no artistic or journalistic compromise necessary. It is a rare natural. Even your notes could be part of the text in a first-person tale. Your problem, aside from putting it and yourself all together, will be modesty. This is a lusty story, a bloody story, a cruel story, and an authentic story of intrigue. It is more, but what the hell more do you need except a prod in the right place and the belief that you really can overcome your multitudinous problems? Or, ~~self-confidence~~ confidence and self-confidence, ~~both of which~~ both of which you lack for no good reason except, perhaps, the conditions of your life, which may include some you impose.

Your last sentence is "The Times is no longer interested in its stringer here since a much larger investigation is being made." If you mean by this more than the feds have pretended to make, I'd like to know all that you know. If you haven't time any other way, please borrow a tape recorder. It can be important. Mitchell made a big mistake in a personal attack on the owner of the Wash Post (he also called her Katie); and the fink-hack judge has been excessive in trying to stifle all comment, including political and press, from my brief conversations today with a number of reporters on his yesterday's decision.

Pearl, with no immediate responsibility for the kids, this is your golden year. Don't waste it by seeing only negatives. Nothing is impossible with the kind of material you have. Kaplan etc is but one. Grab the boots and PULL.

Best,

Dear Harold,

Again thanks for clippings and remarks.

I haven't been coy with you, honest. Only was referring to what I've already written. For example, you ask what I mean by saying, "would be something if Striso's intimations are correct. Would you have grist for the mill?" In my letter of Aug. 17 I quoted the following from a letter from Striso: "...the word from my contact in Red China is that a deal was made with our people in not pushing the narco operations which are vast and would make them look bad.... the break re Demo hdqtrs is interesting and you should read it carefully. What were they searching for? The Democrats picked up some of the stuff re Pigs and the JFK killing which you have been working on. We may have a break in this election..."

This, Harold, is what I was referring to in my letter of Sept. 11. And this is what Striso has been feeding me. No secret. And your letter of Sept. 15, of course answers how you feel about it. You don't believe there is any connection with Striso's intimations and the Watergate job. Is everything straight?

As for my thinking of the slant re the NY Times explanation of drug production - I repeat they've whitewashed China - and without referring to Striso, I would appreciate it if you could explain to me how come a CBS newscaster said on the radio as Nixon was dining on shark's fins in China: "Let's face it, Nixon made a great concession overlooking the quantity of drugs produced by China, which is the largest in the world." Forget Striso, I'd like to hear your opinion on this. I forget the reporter's name, but I'm sure it could be traced by date. I'm not being stubborn, but this is something that has to be clarified. I actually heard this on the radio.

As to my being naive, it's not just in the political area. I'm just naive or perhaps optimistic at times to a fault. However, if ever I write a book on Kaplan it won't stand in my way because from the viewpoint of first person girl reporter visiting Kaplan in prison, I could make it a fun essay with absolutely darling insinuations I write only because it was told to me - which telling, can be proved, by the way.

I guess you know by now Playboy featured the escape story in the October issue. They say the book is to be out January. I had a lawyer but he said although he'd take my case on ~~contingency~~, he couldn't lay out court costs. Neither can I, so what do you do when you want to sue and haven't any money?

Contingency

My agent, Franz Furst, still hasn't heard from TRUE mag which has my ms. and I've written him to get it back if they're not going to use it. They could have scooped Playboy as they had the ms for a long time. Also, friends have advised me to make myself known to Playboy as the reporter who interviewed Kaplan in prison, etc. No one else can write my kind of story. I wrote this to my agent and am waiting for a reply. Do you think a woman's mag would be interested since I'm a female and when the book is out in Jan., it's going to be quite timely to say the least. In other words, what do you think I ought to do? I have to do something right now - I can't afford to sit down and write a book as the freelancing I do locally consists of tuff business writing and is rather exhausting. Anyway, my position in the Kaplan matter is unique and I should be able to do something with it without thinking about money for a while. Even though the kids are away things like dental and phone bills, etc., keep me on the exhaust line.

Incidentally, I misunderstood the info given me re Kaplan doing the book himself. His lawyer wrote me he has the ms and I thought he meant he's doing it. Evidently he was reviewing it - the Playboy story cleans him up to the point of nausea. In a way, I'm glad I didn't see him after he escaped, he would have dictated the story. Even though I was promised to be able to see him after the book is out, I'm not sure I want to, for the same reason. I'd like to concentrate on what happened to Vidal - there are so many versions - imagine Kaplan keeps saying he's alive and his own U. S. attorney's say he's dead! I wish you had had more time to read my notes as the item of Kaplan's telling me there wasn't supposed to be a body in the original plot - and the emphasis Velasquez placed on the fact the body identified as Vidal, was not Vidal - I feel there are big answers right here. Also, the fact Hinckle, Turner and Asinof are concentrating on the dramatic escape is more than for the purposes of selling the book - they don't have to write the dirt - a concession they might be making for Kaplan's talking to them.

Hope you have luck with your Watergate investigation. The Times is no longer interested in its stringer here since a much larger investigation is being made.

Best to you and Lil

Paul
