Dear Chris,

Some time ago we heard that you were ill.

Then we heard that despite your serious illness you were divorcing Robert.

I'd have written you to tell you that we hope things go as well for you as is possible and to express our admiration for keeping your family together despite the great hardships of which we knew but I did not want that letter to reach Robert.

I have just been told that he left and that you and the children are at the home.

I was surprised to learn that Robert had moved to Dallas.

I've also been told that you are divorcing him.

You probably know that he is being sued for thievery, over the video.

That could also be done over those books. They are really terrible. After all these years, after ~~with~~ all his big talk, he remains, actually, ignorant about the assassination.

It is all talk and he does not know what he talks about.

I was shocked at that, too, as I was at his just plain stealing.

We do hope that things go as well with you as they can.

We have been lucky that way. I still have my legs the doctor expected me to lose 20 years ago and I'm still here after being twice hospitalized this year for congestive heart failure.

Bill needs a hip replacement but the doctor is holding off on her having it.

With all best wishes,

Harold
