Dear Harold:

I just today bought your book "Never Again" and I've given it a skim before settling down to read it straight. I've discovered an error at the top of p. 295, in reference to when Connally received the chest wound---"When Connally reflects this is clearly visible in the Zapruder film. It is immediately after, as Connally testified, he started to turn to this (sic) right after he heard the first shot!"

The error, of course, is partly from Connally's testimony, but the Z film does not substantiate what he said. What it does show is that he turns to his right at approximately Z 159, and that he has resumed his normal straight ahead posture even before he goes behind the Stemmons sign. At 159 he was probably responding to what many thought was a firecracker that preceded the fusillade.

Incidentally, a couple of years before his death he and Nellie appeared on the Larry King show, and both of them stated that the shots were coming so fast that they thought they were being fired upon by someone with an automatic rifle.

Best regards,

Russell
