Dear Steve,

Before anything else, let me tell you we did insure the package that didn't reach you, in about March, and I have taken it up with the Post Office. If it does not now turn up on a tracing, or if it turns up damaged, as will be repaid.

Your letter of 1/12 and enclosure are important, as I will explain. But first I tell you I intended being neither insulting nor patronizing. I told you what I thought you should be told. I took the time hoping you would or at least might benefit from it, assuming part of the responsibility myself, as I should have, for I did err in judgement, and I'm not kissing your ass over it. Get that supersensitivity stuff out and set your maturity, not your years. You are unusually well-endowed for your chronological years, but you still have had just so much experience in life. Some of the things you have and have not done are not easily explained this way, but I am neither vindictive in telling you this nor just picking on you. Example: the arrangements you didn't make for us before I went out last time. I went there for no selfish purpose, without possibility of it, and at with what for me are great costs in time and money. Example, the fiancee at Santa Barbara, of which the account I have had since my return are not consistent with what you told me. Let us drop this childishness and proceed with what might be constructive in purpose and possibly in end.

You people have still not told me everything possible on Neuburn. I learned from Bay, by phone, at the Jaffe discussions. As I asked Maggie, I should have all of this. It is now too late, and there is much too much I will not be able to get done that is essential before I have to go to N.C., now scheduled for first Sunday morning flight. Anything else you send me, please to Louis, no drop, at the office. There is now no time for the indirection which, in my event, is not necessary. I will be busy from mid-day Thursday through Friday with Louise, who is arguing the pic-X-rays case in D.C.

Lemerre-Sy: Does this indicate to you he returned to the U.S. or that he didn't leave? Do you see significance if it is a return, after the preludes to his departure, which I have reason to believe was beforehand but expected, unless it was to be in France for Xmas? Hoch has been silent, so I assume he has nothing on this.

Rose's mistrust could be genuine or a common ploy, I do not know which and I do continue my mistrust of him for the reasons already given. The best that can be said is that he was a disaster. I still await that memo. Louis told me he would tell you to send it. To N.C. c/o him now. He sure had a hell of a lot to do with the Frenchman he now does not trust.

Vesjoly is the name I could not recall. Thank you Maggie!

Here is the $5.00 you asked for. What is it for?

Thanks, but I have the NYTimes 1/1 piece on "Farrell".

Briefly, on Palmer: I loaned him a copy of the Alyea film many months ago. He has had a chain of excuses for not returning it. He has been living beyond the potential income of his writing. Example: he spent more on fare alone on one trip than the gross maximum income of his "Confidential" piece, for their top is $200.00. Even with other users, if there is any value to his time, that, on this one score, which also served to introduce him, took more than he could expect, and these are but part of his costs. In New Orleans, he sake that modest quarters be arranged for him, and they were. He immediately moved into swank ones and then started spending money on expensive extra furnishings. This could not be justified on the advance on a book on Banister, which is what he told me he was there for. Then he decided to move there, to remain in N.Y. (He seems to have left very quietly). He worked with Barbara Reid, at Mac's request, and with Boxley. As he and Boxley were reconstructing Nancy Perrin's career in New Orleans they made the greatest possible errors, leaving out what was inconsistent with their preconception. When Barbara asked about this, she was told to forget it, that it made no difference. They then told me of one she was an agent for the other side. Mac Joel first raised an entirely different and superficially credible Nancy story with me. He suddenly abandoned it, knowing I also was working on it kept very secret from me that he and Boxley (and Turner) were working on it. There is more of this I will not go into now.

When I finally learned the incriminating thing they were manufacturing and had sold Jim on, I asked him about it over the phone. He invited me to his home. Without prior announcement of it I took Musterwald along. There is a witness to this. After three hours what it boils down to is that they had nothing he would, as a cub reporter, dare give a city editor, leave alone as an investigator give a public official. None of it stacks up from what he told me, and this also he acknowledged. The airtight alibis mean nothing because "motive" is against fact! Nancy shifted from a murderer to a "conspirator" in the murder. There are things that might have meaning, like a telegram sent "Bankey" (Ridie Brewster, but that was withheld from the office. The things Penn specifies also are missing from the files and no one has ever heard of them. These are the things that jeopardize their creation. They led witnesses into identifying Bradley, so they say, as having been in New Orleans at a time he was known to have been out of the country. They led witnesses into (or as they claim the witnesses dispute it to you and Mac) that there was "engineering equipment" in an apartment (of which the entire account is fiction).

Then they led them into identifying this "engineering equipment" as "communications equipment". It was empty beer-bottles and cigarette butts. They never checked the available records (Louis checked this out himself) and misrepresented those they pretended to have checked. Example, a lead claim in the form of a question about the delay in getting Perrin to the hospital. They simply omitted the known facts existing records show he was where you'd expect him to be, in the emergency room, and give as the time he reached the hospital the time he reached the ward. This ought to be enough. But I tell you what you might guess, and if you do you are to share it with no one but Boggie, and then in strictest confidence: I connect him with a man of great current interest to me, a man I regard as having very curiously hurt us. A man you both have met, not one of us, I submit, by this means or any other at this point, tell you more. It is not mistrust of you. Louis knows, Joel acknowledge that if they were wrong, it would or could ruin everything, test his case did not hang, but he insisted merely that it was right. It is simply that Perrin did not die, a seaman was substituted and that Perrin, who had been a writer (he could barely write his name) became one of the assassins on the knoll. No time for more.

Jaffe's name (please try and get him to give me everything. If anything is sent to Louis nor it will have no meaning, for he has no time to be interested in anything but the preparation of the ~~xxx~~ case in chief, the prosecution case.):

Item a could, in itself, be a vital part of a move for a mistrial. They produce Steve's letter saying "our of ice" and thereby tie Garrison directly with the things said in the movie. This would be much stronger than the credit line.

Their use of the Couder family in New York ends any possibility of JFK sympathy or any kind of progressive or even liberal leaning. I know that firm from way back, as the representative of the pro-Nazi French. Its member, Frederick R. Couder, was a very reactionary Congressman from NYC's silk-stocking district. It is my recollection they were Vichy-French...Please send anything else you recall or can get. Gotta get to N.Y. work. Sincerely,
