

U.S. Termed Source Of Spying Charges Against Paris Aide

Special to The New York Times

PARIS, April 17—The United States intelligence services were said today to have originated allegations that one of President de Gaulle's most trusted aides was a Soviet agent of 20 years' standing.

This was charged by Le Canard Enchaîné, the satirical Paris weekly. It said the allegations, widely reported to be in the forthcoming memoirs of a former French intelligence official, were in revenge for General de Gaulle's go-it-alone policy in the field of intelligence. Paris has derided the allegations.

Le Canard said that in 1962 General de Gaulle ordered all links between French and American intelligence agencies severed. It added that four years later he ordered a purge of all French intelligence officers still working with their American counterparts on the side.

The purge, Le Canard said, was carried out by Jacques Foccart, General de Gaulle's principal aide for intelligence matters. He is the man whom the memoirs attempt to incriminate, the paper said.

Another motive behind the allegations was described as personal resentment by their author, Philippe Thiraud de Vosjoly, over having been directed to return to Paris following his role in the Cuban missile crisis. Le Canard Enchaîné said he was the first to alert the United States about Soviet missiles on Cuba, using a transmitter in the French Embassy in Havana for communication with the Central Intelligence Agency. As a consequence, the article said, he was recalled, but went to the United States instead to work for "the American services."

"A second Philby," Le Canard commented, "but on behalf of the United States."

WASHINGTON, April 17—United States intelligence officials declined today to discuss the allegations made by the former French agent Philippe Thiraud de Vosjoly.

They said that the Central Intelligence Agency had not been in contact with Mr. Thiraud de Vosjoly since his departure from French Government service nearly five years ago and that the French Government had previously been assured that he was not engaging in any work with United States intelligence organizations.
