S.F. Social Figure Joan Hitchcock

Francisco socialite, onetime discotheque hostess, television personality and supervisorial candidate, died yesterday at Queen of the Valley Hospital in Napa after a long illness, She was 49.

Mrs. Hitchcock was born Joan Lucille Lundberg in Chicago, on December 29, 1932. She went to public schools in Chicago and Racine, Wis., and later attended the University of Colorado.

After leaving college, she amoved to Southern California. Mrs. Hitchcock told friends and acquaintances that she met Senator John F. Kennedy while living in Malibu and became his lover for a time.

"He wanted to be president, and I always wanted to be rich," she often said. "We both got what we wanted."

While she was still living in Malibu, she met Fremont Bodine Peter) Hitchcock, a polo-playing millionaire. The two became close friends and, in 1960, they moved to San Francisco and were married.

The Hitchcocks were active in the city's social scene. When Mrs. Hitchcock gave birth to a boy, Zachary Ross Hitchcock, in 1963, the couple invited 150 guests — most of them members of the city's society set — to a "swinging christening party" in his honor in their sumptuous home on Broadway.

The couple was divorced in 1967. Before the divorce was final, Mrs. Hitchcock announced plans to marry motion picture producer Roy Sickner.

The newlywed Sickners separated 16 days after their wedding, however, and a final divorce decree was issued in May, 1969.

While awaiting the decree, she undertook a brief career as a

JOAN HITCHCOCK
'She had a lot of friends'

greeter at a discotheque in the Cannery.

In September, 1970, Mrs. Hitchcock announced her engagement to Harold Goodnough, a former football star from Syracuse University. By December, the newlyweds had separated and Mrs. Hitchcock filed for an annulment.

In late 1972, Mrs. Hitchcock began a new career as the host of a TV show on Channel 20 called "Swingles Scene," which was described by Chronicle television critic Terrence O'Flaherty as "a kind of video auction block" for would-be daters.

The program lasted only a few weeks and, after its demise, Mrs. Hitchcock joined the Hahnemann Hospital Auxiliary

In 1975 she ran for the San Francisco Board of Supervisors, offering voters "A Breath of Fresh Air." She finished in the lower half of a field of 29 candidates.

Mrs. Hitchcock made a brief splash in local papers in 1976 as a founder of the Bay Area Society for the Protection of the Bigfoot, a tongue-in-cheek organization aimed at upgrading the image of the hairy and elusive Northern California creature.

In 1978, she married her fifth husband, Mark McIntyre, an actor who specialized in impersonating President Kennedy. She divorced him three months after the wedding.

She took husband No. 6, Michael Douglas Walton, in January, 1961, and divorced him last August.

Mrs. Hitchcock had been a patient in Queen of the Valley Hospital for much of the last six months, suffering from cirrhosis of the liver. She had undergone surgery for the ailment twice at Children's Hospital in San Francisco.

"She was a beautiful person, and she had a lot of friends," said Joyce Jansen, a longtime friend. "She will be very badly missed."

She is survived by her mother, Mrs. Charles Lundborg of Chicago; her daughter, Leeann Fuller of Newport Beach; and three sons, Brent Uribe of San Francisco, Zachary Hitchcock of San Diego, and Fremont Bodine Hitchcock III of Woodside.

Services had not yet been arranged by last night.

- Bill Wallace

after enrolling at Stanford sity in 1913. He later at fortune in real estate inve

By 1978, when he wa Lee said group medical hadn't turned out quite th had hoped.

"I thought we'd be abligood medical care and save money," he said. "But th happened. Doctors cha much. We charge too muc clinic. I made my money not patients"

Dr. Lee once said, "It s legally determined that a dead when he can't commot when his heart stops Of course, you'd have to t careful in your diagnosis.

"One time I went to so Alto, where a man was in and I told his wife, 'Marth is dead.' But Henry sat began expostulating and p that that was not quite acc

"But Martha showed t er respect for doctors. S 'Henry, lay down. The do th.

Ma.

ur

JT.

m:

S

m

:u

dr

P:

100

p.25 29 JAN 82 (CAEN)

TOO YOUNG to die: Joan Hitchcock, dead at 49 of cirrhosis of the liver, was a dazzler in her day and especially nights - friendly, funny, saucy and sexy. Her best epigram, "Lovers Don't Snore," was to have been the title of the memoir she never wrote, and perhaps it is just as well. Alive, she made a lot of people happy. Her death may make some of her buddies cut down on their drinking, but probably won't . . . For smokers only: M. Waldo Hunter, the noted Calistoga maker of rhubarb wine, got the bad news after the operation. "We couldn't save it," said the doc, meaning his larynx. Writes Waldo: "Imagine the icy clutch of fear that gripped this unreconstructed New Dealer to learn that he could never again rasp out, 'Damn reactionaries!' Other cigaret smokers who have puffed a pack-plus for 50 years might read this with more than casual interest.'

He was born in Spanish Fork, Utah, in 1895, the son of a Presbyterian minister. Dr. Lee's twin brother, Admiral Paul Franz Lee, was chief of naval research when he retired in 1947. Admiral Lee died three years ago.

Dr. Lee said he had but $8 left

Singer-songwriter Jack the "cruising crooner" of syndicated "Breakfast Clu gram and later host of a family television show, diday of heart failure at age

Owens was voted A 10th most popular male after his debut on the "Dor Breakfast Club," broadcast Chicago hotel. He co-wro Hut Sut Song," a nonsen popular in the 1940s, an Soon," a million-seller that 1 on the Hit Parade.

THE WEATHER

BAY AREA TODAY

U.S. FORECAST

300 DATA SUPPLIES BY HATHOMAL WEATHER MEVICE FOR THURSDAY AMALIES IN HEET