The cross-hairs on your target are not and I can't at my age and in the state of my health take any More time for this.

Sorry,

Dear Harold,

I agree with you that there "is a difference between thinking for our own attempts at understanding and presenting theories as facts to people who trust what they read." And yet the whitewashes, the frame-ups, and the manipulations of the basic tenets of our democracy are still perjured.

My point is that for the last four years or so I've been writing a three volume historical fiction novel about this period from an apparently safe distance of thirty years. Vital information is still being withheld from me. I feel vindicated in pointing fingers at potential candidates even if unfairly, for those fingers have and will continue to be pointed by others.

Thanks primarily to your work a majority of Americans are aware of the discrepancies of truth. Perhaps those innocent candidates who are falsely being publicly accused because of cui bono should demand a public accounting of the facts. But right now the scape-goats and fall guys are taking the rap. The sore festers beneath the status quo. Our country and our democracy certainly wasn't cui bono.

I don't view your work as some sort of ground work for future historians. I view your work as posing questions whose answers could be critical for the very survival of our freedom and democracy.

As for my theories I would like the Walker thing looked into, the FBI's Multeer files, but even more recent historical occurrences such as the Watergate tapes, RN's pardoning of Hoffa, LBJ's motives for not running in '68. A total and complete investigation into the three men "marching" in Dallas. Why is the CIA's public accusation of heroine trafficking allowed to go unanswered? Could E.H. Hunt stand up to a thorough investigation? Harold are the crosshairs of my pen on target? We agree on so many things. Perhaps that's why I'm soliciting your help.

Sincerely,

J.L. Johnson
