Dear Paul,

Although seemingly not reported in the papers, Al Cser did a pretty good job of that lying doctor, Colonel Finck, and got some quite important admissions from him. In my limited-edition of POST MORTEM, I go into the fact that all except the agents who were civilians, whether or not government employees, were removed from the autopsy. Finck not only seems to have acknowledged this but adds that the admiral in charge told them not to make certain explorations that were vital, things like that. Shudder with me, please! In the United States?

I go into the NRSP vermin, with brief mention of Robinson, in another book I thus far have in but a very limited (Xerox) edition. I plan an appendix for it, reproducing in facsimile what was known and suppressed about these people, among others. I think it will shake you up a little. Well, if there is anything you can get without too much trouble, as from Brumley (this was a Minuteman investigation to him, and I already have the suppressed documents on them that I plan to use), I'd appreciate it. I think the more definitive this book can be if and when I can get it printed, the better for everyone, including those of men who are always considered fair game by the rescals. Meanwhile, as soon as I can, I'll go over the files I have with names and send you copies or the names, so you can be on guard.

You know, some of these boys are liable to cause Mr. Hunt considerable embarrassment sometime. If you do not mind a suggestion, and if he will listen to you, could you get him to adopt an inflexible policy of either having them make an appointment through his office or not see those who try one weekend until the next one? Before this whole thing is cleaned up, there are, without doubt, others who we will learn about, like Bringuier and Penabaz, who might get some money from him before you have a chance to check them out. It is a painstaking, costly job, but little by little, we are accumulating files on these types.

You gave me copies of some of your files when I was there. I enclose three pages to clue you in to Commission File 385, pp. 203-12. I think this will identify the original source for you and give you an evaluation. When you have finished with them or, if you'd like, copied them, would you please return?

Best regards,

Harold Weisberg
