

The face is strong, warm, masculine. It is an Irish-potato face. planes going at every engle, broad forehesd, chin like a fist, chipmunk owls, a white-toothed smile that ow it ill wide open. The eyes ach al will ofen cast down in alt don choorboy shyness, but they jump live when excitement or anger makes him forget his blushful selfconsciousness. And there is the klaxon of a baritone. It is loud, it projects, and he has to hold it down, when he thinks of it. You feel his bulk, too, a bigness to the one that would be gross without calorie-counting discipline.
If you knew him and did not know his name, you would like him right away for what he is. Back home in Boston, when the liftle men of politics gather, they say about him, "He's a comer guy. They mean he likes people and likes to be around them, more than his brothers did, and in a different way, for themselves as individuals and not as part of a mass. It is the common touch, the ward politician's ability to stand around and chew the rag with the boys on the corner and enjoy it. People come away from him refreshed and pleased, with a feeling of having just had a nice talk with a fine young fellow, not of having had an audience with a man of destiny.
But he is a man of destiny, like it or not. And he does not like it, he does not want it. Deep down, he is trapped in his own Gethsemane. He would like the chalice to pass, yet he approaches what must be, yet ho approaches what must be with resignation, Fuifiling such a destiny will be a long and excruciating ordeal, and he shrinks from it.

But when the time comes, he is resolved to do his best Once he told me that if he could do what he wants, what he really wants, he might take his uncommonly beautiful wife and their daughter and two sons and set sail for the Caribbean, to hobo around among the islands. He would idle and explore and read and just plain live He would set the pace one day at time. There would be no day at a there would be no exigencies of public affice, no inres vice goading him on scheders set by others, no self-reminders that, with his background. training and experience, he owes something to the country
But there is the name to live up to, as he has been taught from childhood. At times, when among friends and laughing it up, in that shell-burst laughter of his, at some sharp-edged wisecrack that all of them love, he suddenly clouds over. It is then that he seems to be remembering who he is and what he is expected to do II am not a candidate for President," he says. And you have to believe him. But then you discount the finality of his tone because the candidate will not be chosen until the summer of 1972, and events and circumstances then, not now, will call the tum Even more than that, in the minds of millions of Americans he has no choice Whericans, he has no choice. The White House is his legacy, his ultimate responsibility, even his debt to society. One brother was there and another was on his way there. and both were cut down by assassins' bullets. It is up to him, goes the argument of these millions, to the argume work thet they began firm in work, they began. If not in 1972, then in 1976 or 1980
For, in the year 2000, or eight presidential elections from now, he will be only 68 years old and still eligible. That is why, despite all the personal and prolessional calamties that have befallen him, far beyond the strength of most men to bear, there is no way to make a list of Democrats who might be chosen to oppose Richard M. Nixon, or whichever Republicen runs, withwicling the name of the senout including the name of the senor Senator from Massachusetts, Edward M. Kennedy, turned 39 las George Washington's Birthday. This truth of the politics of 1972 began to sink in among the experts in March, at the annual Gridiron Club Dinner in Washington, D.C. The Gridiron Club has nothing to do with football, except the politido war it in the most prestigcal variely. his the most prestiglous press association in the world, Its active membership limited to 50 Washington correspondents of proven merit. You do not join, you get elected, and that takes years. It exists for The Dinner, a white-tie ecumenical conclave of the usually embattied forces that comprise The Establishment: the President and his Cabinet, the Supreme Court the elite of Congress and of publishing, broadcasting, diplomacy and big business.

Santenay 1966, and laughing as the sually staid sanior correspondents, in silly costumes and songs ccompanied by the Marine Corps Band, lampooned the newsiest Government figures of the times, from the President on down
Midway through the gala, there was a scuffing of chairs and a craning of necks. It was time for Ted Kennedy to speak for the Democratic party. Practically all of the 600 or so in the room had already written him off as a potential presidential nominee. He had been the unchallenged front-runner until the tragedy at Chappaquiddick and then, as if to cilinch his political doom, Senate Democrats had ted him out as their assistan leader, the "whip" job, in lanuary. He was through, the experts agreed, at least for 1972. But they leaned forward expectantly to liston. He was through, but he was a Kannedy, the last of the Kennedys. How would he do?
He was nervaus, pressing down a shock of thick reddish-brown hair over his forehead. He blinked in the spotlight and cleared his throat. He knew that his future inight be written in the pages he put on the lectern. His mouth was pinched, but it twitched toward a grin and hia blue eyes danced in anticipation of the merry mischief he was about to commit, in the name of the Gridiron's hallowed "spirit of high good humor"
He began softly. It was a pleasure to be among so many good friends. And he ended softly, a! most in a whisper: And as we look to the future, 1 think we ail share a goal, put down in the words of Aeschylus, a gael which my broth ers used to quote-To tame the savageness of man sud make genthe life of the world,
Eyes flickered. Somebody coughed. A beat or two of silence then the ovation broke like a thun derstorm. Between the opening curtsy and that ciosing prayer, he was happily flipping firecrackers at the big names of politics. His booming baritone, his Boston-Irish way-up-in-the-nose vowels and his explosive laughter at his own jokes infected the banquet hall and set it oo roaring. The Establishment caught the full significance of his argets, all White House potentials 1972-including himself
Dick Nixan got it first: "The Gridiron Club [in choosing its offiers] realized long ago something that many of un have realized only lately-thar the best President is a one-term President. A pause here or the knowing laughter. "We are, of course, disappointed that President Nixan couldn't be with us tonight. But we understand that he had an important previous engage.
