

1971
 ... ROSE, Al...
 ... U.S. ...
 ... that the United States would not resume bombing North Vietnam
 ... little more ...
 ... 27-volume ...
 ... Ronning said ...
 ... it is ...
 ... Ronning ...
 ... Vietnam ...
 ... only ...
 ... the ...
 ... stop ...
 ... that ...
 ... U.S. ...
 ... complete withdrawal ...
 ... of the National Liberation ...
 ... as the government of South ...
 ... had been completely ...
 ... North would come unconditionally ...
 ... Ronning ...
 ... the offer, making a counterproposal ...
 ... the government in Hanoi would ...
 ... to help the Viet Cong in South ...
 ... Vietnam.

General Says Pentagon Study Shows 64 Peace Offer by Hanoi

WASHINGTON, July 5 (AP) — A North Vietnamese general said today that Hanoi was willing to drop two major demands in a peace offer that the Pentagon study of the Vietnam war did not describe.

The general, Phan Van Dong, told Mrs. M. Bevington, a Canadian, in a telephone interview from his home in Camrose, Alberta.

Bevington said that on his return from both visits to Hanoi he had met with William P. Bundy, Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs.

The Canadian said he took issue with Mr. Bundy's report of their conversation following his July visit. As related in the Pentagon study, Mr. Bundy reported that Mr. Bevington had found no opening or feasibility in the North Vietnamese position.

Mr. Bevington said that in his own opinion, because the North Vietnamese had failed to make an attempt to end the war in Vietnam on honorable terms, the United States by continuing its military and economic aid to South Vietnam.

the North Vietnamese Premier, Phan Van Dong, told Mrs. M. Bevington that Hanoi was willing to drop two major demands. These were its long-standing insistence on American recognition of the National Liberation Front, the guerrillas' political organization, and prior withdrawal of all American troops.

Such negotiations could be

In a telephone interview from his home in Camrose, Alberta, Bevington said that on his return from both visits to Hanoi he had met with William P. Bundy, Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs.

The Canadian said he took issue with Mr. Bundy's report of their conversation following his July visit. As related in the Pentagon study, Mr. Bundy reported that Mr. Bevington had found no opening or feasibility in the North Vietnamese position.

Mr. Bevington said that in his own opinion, because the North Vietnamese had failed to make an attempt to end the war in Vietnam on honorable terms, the United States by continuing its military and economic aid to South Vietnam.