

Gentlemen:

No doubt about it. South and Central America could possibly become a problem. If left to themselves. Castro helped to start the ball rolling and the Great Bear is waiting to pounce. But in my opinion there is a solution. The South American is a strange person. I think I know their emotional makeup fairly well. They love the military. There is nothing a South American loves better than a uniform and a cause. They have the uniforms just do not quite understand what the cause should be. The Communists have attempted to shove their doctrine down their throats, but it did not sit upon their stomachs well. Their emotional beings are not set up for Communism. The South American usually love pomp and circumstance. At the same time they are close to the earth. My name is known in South and Central America. I understand that it is respected. I am not a Communist and they know it. However they are not sure exactly what I am. I know their temperament. They could never be Communists for a number of great many reasons: If I could go to South America I think that I could organize them in a year. South & Central America: Cuba is a harder nut to crack but I think it could be done. Of course I could not stay in that country for a week without being thrown out or shot. But South and Central America are a problem and a challenge. A mighty interesting one to say the least. My name is known. It is a great shame not to take advantage of it. Give them some games to play. Bring the countries closer together. Closer ties with the United States.

I go to a place in New Orleans called the Cascade des Mornises. The latter is all seen to like me. They want to be my soldiers. I tell them that I am not a military man. I tell them to fight for peace. I say that if war ever comes then they can be my soldiers. I tell them that I owe my allegiance to Washington and that I fight for the U.S. They love it. I think something of the kind could be done ~~in~~ in S.A. They know me as 3 or 4 or 11 or 6. - most of them know my real name. They are somewhat like children. I have always been good with children.
At any rate it is something to think about.

Sincerely,

Godfrey L. Kirkpatrick..
