Dear Mr. Lopez,

I do appreciate the kind ^{com}ments in your letter of the 13th and I thank you for them. They'd always be welcome but at 82 and in impaired health they are more so.

One of the problems in plunging into a great mass of paper is knowing where to begin and knowing where what is of interest is. When I was going over the records I got I made duplicate copies of some I thought would be of interest and filed them separately by name and subject, but that is of use only to those who are here or in the future, when all I have will be at Hood College, can go there.

I am not able to travel safely so I've not been to the new Archives building that is actually on the campus of the Univ. of Md. at College Park, MD but some friends ^{who} have been there tell me that it is all computerized. If you want something on John Jones the computer should indicate all that is in the JFK archive at that new building.

It is my understanding that under the 1992 Act all people are entitled to the first 100 copies free. So, perhaps, if you know what you want, you can at least get a start that way with no more cost than a couple of stamps.

As a practical matter when I can no longer use stairs I can no longer do that and have virtually no access myself to all those pages I got. Others do come and use them.

When we were broke and in debt we could not reprint. Then we were too feeble to handle a regular printing or to move the stock in our basement to make room for it. So we are able to keep the first Whitewash and Oswald in New Orleans (you use the subtitle) available by much more costly xerox editions with very durable and costly bindings. I enclose our list.

Killing the Truth is ^{what} pathetic Livingstone did. There is no truth in what he cooked up about me when he was embarrassed by my writing he cannot ^{refute} ^{refute}. When he was here, which as often, he wasted much time for me but he did not ^{do} ^{use} his own work in my files. He used a policeman in his off time. That policeman stole extensively. And not only for Livingstone. But if I wanted to I am not able to supervise those who use my files because I cannot get to them for myself. And on principle I've told them both never to return. There was nothing else as a practical matter I could do.

Don't waste money on Livingstone's High Treason 2 but if you have it why not compare what he says about me in it and in his killing of the truth, before the real truth told him he is an authentic phony. And essentially a subject-matter ignoramus.

While you are in college, remember, first things first ^{and} your education is first. On this subject plagued as it is by all those theories that are not proven and cannot be, I suggest that you ask yourself two questions: is this reasonable, and if you can tell yourself it is, is it possible? Thanks and best wishes, Harold Weisberg
