

Met with Gerald Lefcourt and Bill Bender (?), Rutgers center for constitutional law, in Bud's suite of offices this a.m., Bud and Lesar also present. They are fascinated with the fit of some of my Minuteman stuff, that dealing with the Greenwich Village bombing, and an FBI informant in their Detroit 13 case.

They are also fascinated by the prospects if on discovery the government doesn't provide this stuff and other materials I have given to the FBI, similar stuff. They now have all of it. They had an afternoon full. They wanted me to rent a car, drive home for the files and then take them back. Jim drove up instead and took the files back.

They seem to have an exceptional judge and they confront Guy Goodwin, to whom all this stuff should have gone, unless the FBI already had it, in which even it is still covered by the judge's discovery order.

I doubt this case will go to trial, not with that judge and the discovery order he has issued, which includes all wiretaps in a case that may have history's (non-White House) largest volume of them.

I told Lefcourt the complete history of this material and a brief history of my source plus what I did with the material after I got it.

It is not certain that the Greenwich Village Minuteman in Weatherman's clothing is the Detroit informant. Their descriptions, activities and whereabouts at the crucial times overlap. I suspect he'll go for the proof on discovery. If it stacks, what a thing it will be: FBI murdering. And then using the murderer all over again, with the same kind of people.

We talked longer than this brief note indicates, and about more.

Because I gave Jim some of these files, including the one of most interest, that establishes the time. I also told him of what else I did, where the time is again established. They'll want affidavits from Jim and me. I guess they'll be back for one from me. If they and Jim had time, they could have drafted his this p.m.
