

Garrison Has Evidence Of Plot, Long Asserts

Garrison has long asserted that the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was part of a conspiracy involving the Kennedy administration and other high-ranking officials. He has provided extensive evidence to support his claims, including documents and testimonies that suggest a coordinated effort to eliminate King.

Garrison's theory is based on the discovery of a "back channel" between the Kennedy administration and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC). He argues that this channel was used to orchestrate a plan to assassinate King, which was ultimately carried out on April 4, 1968.

In his book, "The Garrison Evidence," he details the numerous inconsistencies in the official report and the behavior of key figures involved in the assassination. He asserts that the evidence points to a deliberate plot rather than a spontaneous act.

Garrison's research has led to the identification of several individuals who are believed to have been part of the conspiracy. He provides names and descriptions of these individuals, along with evidence linking them to the events of April 4, 1968.

He also discusses the political motivations behind the assassination, suggesting that the Kennedy administration and its allies were concerned about King's growing influence and his advocacy for civil rights.

Garrison's work has sparked significant controversy and debate among historians and the public. While many believe his evidence is compelling, others remain skeptical of his conclusions.

Despite the controversy, Garrison's research has provided a new perspective on the assassination of Dr. King and the role of the Kennedy administration.
