Dear Mr. Heisel,

In recent years most of the people who write me make it a point of telling me that they are young, were not born or were only a few years old. I'm glad that so many of the young are interested in that crime with such consequences.

Perhaps your son was turned off by all the business is so many books. Any one to read it is by the others and they are also by all in varying degrees useful in (sorry about the ribbon, and a new one at that) or worse.

In general I do let others look at the archive I'll be leaving but other than those working in the field, briefly, because I'm by and unwell and want to by spend what time remains for me perfecting the record for history to the degree I can. But they are of such volume there is not much you can see at a glance. You can see their form, style, things like that. You'll be welcome.

Some of the young people do get interested in the documents.

There is a young woman here right now working on a college honors paper.

Our price list is enclosed.

Sincerely,

Harold Weisberg
