

I had more investigative experience than any of them:
This would, if remotely true, explain the performance of the staff lawyers. Not Ball, Jenner, Adams (police Commissioner of NYC) etc. It is hardly an explanation of Manchester's performance.

His "investigative experience" was, perhaps, like that of J.D. Tippit. After 10 years Tippit was without promotion or its prospect. But he did have 10 years experience.

Did Manchester have more investigative experience than J. Edgar Hoover? James D. Rowley: The combined FBI and Secret Service: These were the investigators, not the lawyers, junior or senior. Manchester's own investigative senses, those fine intellectual nerve ends that twitch and twitter, excite the mind, deny sleep to the body, tense the muscles, seem to have been dulled by the Roman plenty. (go into office, or desk (not enough for one of his eminence, but then look how else the government saved money. There is a budget to balance, and since a president is murdered only once every 46 3/4 years, this is a good place to have a president, and if you are a president, you should be a good president, and if you are a good president, you should be a good president.

and if you are a good president, you should be a good president, and if you are a good president, you should be a good president.
