

"A BOOK FOR THE AGES"

"Not even the remembered massive coverage can diminish the power of Manchester's all-encompassing narrative." — Time Magazine

"A stupendous achievement."

— MARGARET L. COIT, Saturday Review

"It is a book for the ages . . . a glowing piece of historical writing."

— WILLIAM HOGAN, San Francisco Chronicle

"A book that will itself become part of the history it records."

— JOHN BARKHAM,
Saturday Review Syndicate

"An extraordinarily impressive, fascinating and absorbing piece of work . . . About its importance as a historical document, a compelling account, an invaluable compilation of source material on one of the century's central events, there is no question."

— ELIOT FREMONT-SMITH, New York Times

"It is an epic — one that will be read for a long time."

— ROBERT L. DONOVAN,
Los Angeles Times

"William Manchester has written a book which will be used by historians for the next 2000 years. If this sounds exaggerated, consider how gratified we would be to have a similar account of the death of Caesar . . . The overriding value of the book is that Manchester got the participants in the tragedy while their recollections were still fresh and before they could be tidied for history."

— JAMES A. MICHENER,
Philadelphia Inquirer
