

NIGHT TALKS HELD ON KENNEDY BOOK

Both Sides Hoping for an Accord by Christmas

By DOUGLAS ROBINSON

Negotiations between Harper & Row, Publishers, Inc., and representatives of the Kennedy family continued through the day and into the night yesterday in an attempt to reach agreement before the Christmas holidays.

Spokesmen for both sides in the controversy over publication of the book "The Death of a President" expressed guarded optimism that a settlement could soon be reached.

Most of the discussions yesterday, it was learned, centered on a revised manuscript given by Harper & Row to Simon H. Rifkind, a former Federal judge who is Mrs. John F. Kennedy's legal representative in the case.

Although it is not known just what had been expurgated from the original manuscript, most of the changes were thought to involve Mrs. Kennedy's personal life.

"We're still at it," a source close to the talks said last night. "There are no snags, just the mechanical problems of that much text."

In addition to discussions between those discussing editorial changes, the attorneys for both sides were meeting separately to work out the legal aspects of the case.

A spokesman for Harper & Row said that talks would continue today and Monday, "if necessary."

Adding to the need for speed on the part of the negotiators is a hearing scheduled for Tuesday in State Supreme Court on Mrs. Kennedy's suit to block publication of the book.

In her lawsuit, Mrs. Kennedy contended that William Manchester, the author of the book, had violated her rights by going ahead with plans to publish the unapproved manuscript dealing with the assassination of President Kennedy.

Although she conceded that she once had authorized the book, she said she was moving against its publication in the interest of "accuracy, good taste and dignity."

At the apparent heart of the controversy is material obtained by Mr. Manchester in 10 hours of taped interviews with Mrs. Kennedy in which she had revealed her deepest thoughts. There are also indications the book may contain some unflattering political material that might affect the relation-

Taiwan Assures U.S. on Kennedy Book

By JOHN W. FINNEY

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23

The United States has discussed with the Chinese Nationalist Government the possibility of preventing publication in Taiwan of an unauthorized version of William Manchester's controversial book on President Kennedy's assassination.

As a result of these recent diplomatic discussions, the Government in Taipei apparently has given assurances that it will attempt to prevent publication of a pirated edition of the original version of the book, "The Death of a President."

A State Department spokesman said tonight that "the Chinese Government is as interested as the United States Government to see that no actions are taken by Chinese publishers that would be offensive to interested parties here in the United States."

Robert J. McCloskey, State Department spokesman, confirmed that "discussions" about the manuscript had been held in recent days between members of the United States Embassy in Taipei and officials of the Chinese Nationalist Government.

Mr. McCloskey was vague about the nature of the discussions, saying only that they dealt with "the manuscript." From a later statement issued by the State Department, however, it was apparent that the discussions dealt with the possibility that unauthorized portions of the manuscript might be published in Taiwan.

The discussions were initiated, according to the State Department, by the Taiwan Embassy here, which voiced its concern over newspaper reports that the manuscript might have found its way into the hands of publishing houses in Taiwan. The embassy informed the department that it had recommended to its Government that Taiwan publishers be discouraged from using any such manuscript. Discussions were then held in Taipei between the two Governments.

Mr. McCloskey seemed to rule out the possibility that the State Department's unusual step of discussing a book manuscript with a foreign government was prompted by any of the participants in the controversy.

"So far as I am aware," he said, no request for State Department intervention in Taipei had been received from Mrs. John F. Kennedy, the publishers of the book, Harper & Row, Publishers, Inc., or from any member of Congress.

No Katzenbach Message

An aide to Under Secretary of State Nicholas deB. Katzenbach said that no message requesting the United States Embassy in Taipei to raise the issue with the Nationalist Government had been sent from Mr. Katzenbach's office. Mr. Katzenbach is a former subordinate of Senator Robert F. Kennedy when the latter was Attorney General and is a close friend of the Kennedy family.

Senator Kennedy has been active in the legal efforts by Mrs. Kennedy to prevent publication of the book as originally written by Mr. Manchester.

One phase of the legal dispute was settled out of court this week when Look magazine, which will print a four-part serialization of an abridged version of the book next month, agreed to delete or revise some passages Mrs. Kennedy felt were an invasion of her privacy. A suit by Mrs. Kennedy is still pending against Harper & Row, which plans to publish the book next April.

It has been suggested that in the distribution of the original manuscript among potential publishers and purchasers of serial rights, some copies may have found their way into the hands of pirate book publishers in Taiwan.

A State Department spokesman said tonight, however, that "we have no evidence that the manuscript or any part of it is in Taiwan, nor does our present information give any indication that any Chinese publishing house is planning publication of the manuscript or part of it."

Since the Nationalist Government is not a signatory to the International Copyright Convention of 1955, a flourishing business has developed on Taiwan in publishing pirated low-cost editions of foreign books.

The Nationalist Government has passed a law against book piracy, but there have been no convictions under it.

ship between Senator Robert F. Kennedy and President Johnson.

Named as defendants in the suit were Mr. Manchester, Harper & Row and Cowles Communications, Inc., the publisher of Look magazine, which plans a 60,000-word serialization of the book.

Last Wednesday night, Mrs. Kennedy agreed to withdraw her suit against Look after the magazine had agreed to "remove or modify" passages that relate to the personal life of herself and her children.

Yesterday's talks were said to be going slower than the previous negotiations with Look because of the larger size of the book over the magazine serialization. The book, which is scheduled for publication in April, will run to some 300,000 words.

Mr. Manchester was also said to be participating in the current talks. The author did not take part in the negotiations with Look representatives.

Although Mrs. Kennedy has agreed to drop her suit against the magazine, no notice of discontinuance was filed in court yesterday and the publication technically remains as a defendant. Any legal papers, however, could be filed on Monday with Saul S. Streit, the ranking justice of the court

GERMAN DEFIANT ON BOOK CHANGES

Editor of Stern Vows to Run
Original Manchester Text

By PHILIP SHABECOFF

Special to The New York Times

BONN, Dec. 23 — The editor-in-chief of West Germany's illustrated magazine Stern said today he would ignore demands by Look magazine and begin serializing the original text of "The Death of a President" Jan. 15.

Henri Nannen, the editor, said by telephone that Look told him in a message yesterday that it was sending Stern revised proofs of the book about the assassination of President Kennedy.

He said the message asserted that it was "imperative" that only the revised version be published and demanded that the original proofs of the book by William Manchester be destroyed.

Mr. Nannen added that he understood Look was threatening legal action to prevent Stern from publishing the controversial book.

Look agreed to delete portions of the text after Mrs. John F. Kennedy objected to the original version on the ground that it contained references that related to the personal life of herself or her children.

Deleted Passages

Mr. Nannen said that as far as he knew the passages deleted by Look concerned relations between the Kennedy family and President Johnson.

"Perhaps this will not be very pleasant for the political career of Robert Kennedy, but that cannot keep us from printing the historical record," he declared.

"No passage in the book goes into the personal life of Mrs. Kennedy, but there are passages which are not very friendly to Johnson. I never read such a compelling book.

"If it hurt Mrs. Kennedy in any way I would naturally stop publication immediately. But I am convinced it is politics — Bobby's career — [that caused the objections to the book] and that is not our concern."

Mr. Nannen complained that Stern was being made the scapegoat in the controversy over publication of the original manuscript of "The Death of a President."

He said the Danish newspaper Berlingske Tidende, which he said was planning to publish the full text, had also received a warning telegram from Look.

He noted that the Look telegram also asked that no advertising that used pictures of living members of the Kennedy family be distributed.

Mr. Nannen said that he had first looked at the original text of Mr. Manchester's book in London and had paid $72,000 for the serialization rights, which he believes is the highest sum ever paid for a book by a German magazine.
