

U.S. Dismisses Cases Of 800 Protesters

The U.S. attorney general today announced that he has dismissed charges against more than 800 persons arrested at the U.S. Capitol during the May 4 riot. The dismissals, which had been expected since the trial of the 1968 protesters, are highly unusual.

The dismissals, which had been expected since the trial of the 1968 protesters, are highly unusual. The dismissals, which had been expected since the trial of the 1968 protesters, are highly unusual.

The dismissals, which had been expected since the trial of the 1968 protesters, are highly unusual. The dismissals, which had been expected since the trial of the 1968 protesters, are highly unusual.

The dismissals, which had been expected since the trial of the 1968 protesters, are highly unusual. The dismissals, which had been expected since the trial of the 1968 protesters, are highly unusual.

The dismissals, which had been expected since the trial of the 1968 protesters, are highly unusual. The dismissals, which had been expected since the trial of the 1968 protesters, are highly unusual.

The dismissals, which had been expected since the trial of the 1968 protesters, are highly unusual. The dismissals, which had been expected since the trial of the 1968 protesters, are highly unusual.

The dismissals, which had been expected since the trial of the 1968 protesters, are highly unusual. The dismissals, which had been expected since the trial of the 1968 protesters, are highly unusual.