

Dear Jamie,

5/1/97

I finally got a new ribbon and will get it on after today's mail is out.

Herewith your check for $50 and the Belin and Holland chapters with a few corrections of what each of us should have caught earlier. My apologies.

I am beginning to see how I can separate these two and perhaps use them with the Riebling when you return that. Inside is outside reason in size and dis-organization. When you make these few corrections and send them would you please also send two duplicate disks of each? I may be able to get what I have in mind put together here. But keep the original disk. Identify computer program or them

You ask about italics and underlining and the answer is either with what we do not have, consistency. For a computer I suppose italics but either is OK.

On direct quotes that are single-spaced and indented, you ask should you indent the first line. Yes if it is the beginning of a paragraph, as most is.

I've forgotten but again consistency, whether there is space between those paragraphs. I think none is needed.

With the exterminator and ants, when one lives in a woods that has carpenter ants it seems that problem never ends. They do not eat like termites do and they even get around windows set into walls. These extra trips, <sup>and</sup> which each had us out of the house a half day, <sup>were</sup> ~~was~~ caused by a means of getting in that had not been influenced by all the regular and special treatments. Those ants, and these are great numbers of the male breeders who fly and look like wasps, found a flaw in the chimney flashing and although the rain did not come in, they did! As of yesterday morning I was still finding new ones that were poisoned and dropped down during the night or were in the last ghroes.

Thanks and best,

Hard
