

James Madison University
Department of Communication

September 15, 1987

Dear Mr. Weisberg,

Thank you for your last letter; I am sorry I have not written since I saw you last June. I ended up having a busier summer than I had planned. I ended up writing two articles from my dissertation. One was a revision of my thesis toned down a bit to article length. I submitted it to a journal called the International Journal of Small Group Research. The other was on Hoover and the Warren Commission; I decided to write an article first then hopefully expand on it for the possibility of a book. I am still working on this article with a little help with one of my professors from Penn State. He is an Englishman who was educated at Cambridge. Once the piece is finished he suggested that I submit it to an English journal entitled International Security. If any of these get published I will send you some copies.

I went to a movie last night and got a big suprise. It was a movie set in New Orleans entitled "The Big Easy." The movie was so so, but in one scene they had Jim Garrison (Garison ?) playing himself as a judge. I let out a yelp when he appeared on the screen, I am sure that nobody in the theatre knew who he was. My students are so ignorant of national and world affairs that it worries me. I asked one of my classes what they thought of Bork and whether or not he should be appointed to the Supreme Court. Only two out of forty knew who he was. Good help us if he is appointed.

Well, thanks again for your letter and I will get in touch with Paul Hoch. Take care.

Sincerely,