Dear Harold,

Just as I had adjusted to life without the usual routine of speaking or writing with Sylvia, a new blow came in the mail today in the form of the latest issue of The Fund Decade.

I wrote those 25 questions for Buckley at Sylvia's request, with the explicit understanding that no one but the USCA would receive a copy. It now appears that she sent copies to several people, including Larry Harris, who supplied her to Fox. Now, a virtual outline of my early work on Buckley has entered the public domain. And I was not even credited!

I am so sadly disappointed in Sylvia. I had completely put the whole business of her papers out of my mind, but this latest evidence of betrayal convinces me that I was a complete fool to place my trust in her.

I am setting up my own practice while at the same time looking for a partner to help me keep going until enough business comes in to enable me to be independent (just a handful of matters will do the trick). I have a telephone number and mail-drop setup on Park Avenue, and I have ordered stationery. If I get a job, I will be coming down for a week before starting out.

Best,
Roger
