Madmen Rule the World

They call themselves the 'elite'. They consider themselves above the laws of ordinary men. The 'elite' exist in every country. They are the real power behind nearly every government. In their insane lust for power they are determined to rule all the world-- or destroy it.

Right: A number of the 'elite' attend a social gathering at the governor's palace at Bahia, Brazil prior to the anti-communist revolt there.

The Madmen

By David O. Woodbury

On November 3rd, 1964, civilization stumbled across a threshold, as forty million Americans, simply by casting their ballots, fixed upon the world the seal of approval of government by madmen. The twenty-six million who supported the hard road back to sanity made no difference to the outcome. They were overwhelmed by the majority choice, which was apparently directed toward immortality, decadence and eventual slavery. Now two things remain: shall the defeated multitude—and it was a large one—attempt to stem the tide, running full current toward chaos. If so, how are they to do it?

Those who understand the appalling dangers of the situation are known now everywhere as conservatives, in contrast to the liberals, leftists, socialists and communists. The objective of this latter gentry is the destruction of the world as we know it now. The goal of the conservatives is the recovery of freedoms already lost and the guarantee that these freedoms shall not be threatened again. I take it that no true conservative is in any doubt as to the nature of his choice, but he is in mortal doubt and bewilderment as to how it can be made to prevail.

The conservative problem is made worse because most of our relatively slim number do not know for certain what or whom they are to fight. Nor do they clearly understand that it is impossible to fight at all, let alone win, unless one does know the nature, extent and location of the enemy. Thus few can take a solid stance, set forth on a course of action and carry it through. Their dilemma is made still worse for lack of cohesion among the twenty-six million (if, indeed, there are that many still). A hundred different groups are riding off in all directions on a hundred different mounts. There is no one agreed battle cry, and no one supreme commander. And this, of course, is as the enemy wants it and the thing that will, if he can maintain it, insure his victory.

Still further is the problem complicated by the little time we have left to make a stand. Had we not waited while the enemy grouped, trained and chose his battlefield, we might have had no problem at all. But we did wait and now we must go into the fight with all but the last battle lost.

Overwhelmingly most important, if we are to make a start, is a thorough knowledge of the nature of the enemy. What are we to fight?

I am ready to stand up and be counted as believing this: we are confronted with a horde of madmen. Mad in the same sense that Hitler was mad—a fact that the whole world accepts. Mad in the sense that their conduct, their aspirations, their reasoning, their actions are those of minds out of control, irrational, unsound, blown by a hurricane of willful insistence upon principles that civilization has proved over and over again to be specious and often degenerate.

This madness is attested in a thousand ways, in every part of the world. It was the madness of the Berlin wall; of the butchery of millions of communists by their own leaders, in cold blood; the madness to believe that any group of men, no matter how arrogant or sick, should have the right to subjugate the world. These were not acts of rational human beings but of seriously deranged people suffering from monstrous fixations and delusions of apocalyptic grandeur.

Equally was it madness for the leaders of what is forlornly termed the "free world," to permit or condone these and many others without instantly objecting and taking steps to stop them. It was madness in our leaders not to know that a madman, once given rein, would become madder still. It was madness to suppose that a madman can be dealt with on any rational ground. It was madness to talk of coexisting with such people, trading with them, culturally exchanging with them. Indeed, it was stark idiocy to give in to them in any way. For never in the long sweep of history has the irresponsible tyrant been eliminated except by forcible removal by the hand of man or death.

What confronts us is a gallery of tainted leaders, on both sides, who live and act in a paranoid world of their own. What they demand we do, as citizens of a country which fancies it holds the balance of power, is to wait while these madmen summit their way to the annihilation of us all, in a mad reach for power for themselves.

All the world understood that Hitler was a maniac. Why can it not understand that his pattern is repeating itself in much more sinister form? The answer is that this time insanity has recruited a vast apparatus of propaganda, a diabolical cleverness in posing as benefactors of mankind. This time we are faced, not by a simple maniac but by a new elite of maddoids — unbalanced but dangerously brilliant people—who are capable of using the totality of science and political knowledge against us and the world. The answer is that these people have acquired ultimate power and know how to use it.

You cannot overcome madmen by talk, by excuses, by complacency, by quiet attrition, by waiting for them to blow away or mellow. You can only overcome them by treating them as all insane are treated: by detention, by removing from them all capability for doing harm. The dope addict cannot safely be retained in society without rigid control. The drunk cannot be permitted to drive a car. The mongoloid idiot cannot be given his freedom to roam with a knife. The harmless insane inmate, who thinks that he is Napoleon, cannot be made the head of a corporation. There is no way for the unbalanced mind to be accepted into the stream of normal life without disaster. We face that very disaster now.

No responsible person would advocate that the butchering savages of the Congo be invited to New York and given the key to the city. None would allow a homicidal maniac to enter a subway, armed. None would permit a known arsonist to roam unattended through an oil refinery. Yet, far more dangerous permissions than these have been given by the free world to the warped mentalities and the swollen egos of the men who lead us. We are visitors in a madhouse that covers the earth, and the inmates are preparing to tiptoe out and lock us in.

Conservatives far and wide are told that their job is to "educate," that it is only necessary to awaken sleeping millions to their dangers. And that then, pursued by a shining army of patriots, the enemy will scatter and melt before us. Utter nonsense. The madmen who confront us are sick, and they have contrived to transmit a touch of their malady to hundreds of millions of once healthy minds, so that half the world is to some degree afflicted. If there are some among us still sane, are they merely to educate the sick in order to make them well? It is a fatuous hope. No one educates the madman, mild or violent. He must be restrained and treated. Education is an orderly process carried on by the wise and knowledgeable for the benefit of others less knowledgeable but in some measure competent and anxious to learn. Education cannot benefit the imbecile; education could not have drawn the sting from Hitler, nor altered the viciousness of the tyrants who took over from him. Nor, unfortunately, can it deal successfully with millions already brainwashed by the madmen. It can only convert those who are truly asleep, truly preoccupied with their own small affairs, but still rational.

To educate, we must pick the people who are still not mad but only bewildered and bemused. To attempt to educate all, regardless, is a waste of time when time is the one thing we lack. You cannot educate a pupil who does not have the "need to know." Yet today we throw away days, weeks, months in attempting to salvage the brainwashed, whose minds cannot respond except by long and patient therapy. This we cannot afford to do.

How, then, is the job to be done? How shall we recruit an army large enough to be effective against the mad ones in power? Our only possible program is a crash program. And it must be the right program, that will work the first time. There is no time for more.

One of our most serious handicaps is that the amorphous mass of people who simply do not understand us and will not listen, are already apt pupils in another school, already listening and learning from the enemy. And they are doing this through the most innocent means available today: the programs on the air, the printed word, the emotional harangue. A wily enemy has seen to this by capturing, long ago, the authority and output of all communication.

"All I know is what I read in the papers," is a phrase we used to use with a wry innocence and a smug conformity. It is all too true today. The infallibility of our free press is still defended by most of its victims. Whatever is read in print or viewed in the personality and authority of the commentator is almost universally believed, honored and obeyed. And without most of us knowing it, the "freedom" of the press has shifted to license; its objective is no longer to inform but to proselytize and brainwash. That this should be so is not only the shame of the press but the red badge of success of the enemy. How he has accomplished so dangerous a surgical operation with the full consent of the patient is difficult to say, and cannot be proved. But it has happened.

I believe that until we have discredited and knocked out the advance army of the liars and propagandists of communication, we cannot confront the enemy or be forewarned of his attack. Bent on destruction, the madmen of the world have combined against us.

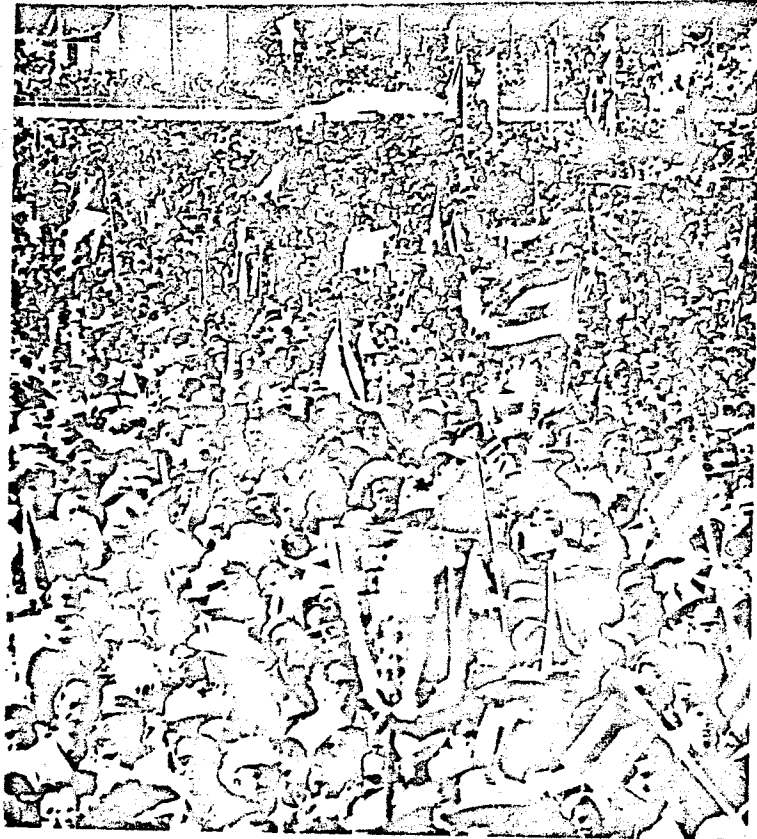

Somehow, by diligence, courage and wisdom, the rotted hulk that was once a glorious fourth estate must be pried off the shoals of deceit and treachery and sunk, a new and seaworthy vessel built and put on the high seas of communication. We cannot do our job of saving even the mildest victim while those who cling to the wreck are fed only poison.

When a person has drunk poison you do not attempt to relieve his retching and convulsions with education. Somehow you get the poison out of him in time or you lose him. It is as serious as that. Our media of communication feed us poisoned candy. It must be stopped!

No one can tell how these impossible changes are to be made by ordinary men and women who have wisdom but no power, while a clique of powerful madmen runs the ship toward the rocks. But I am convinced that it can be done, if and when we ourselves understand and act upon the real problem of madness that faces us. The problem is vast, overwhelming, impossible of solution. Very well; countless patriots through history have faced as fantastic odds and have won. But all of them have first come to grips with the true nature of the enemy.

That is what we conservatives must do now, and do it fast. It is not others who must be educated first; it is ourselves.

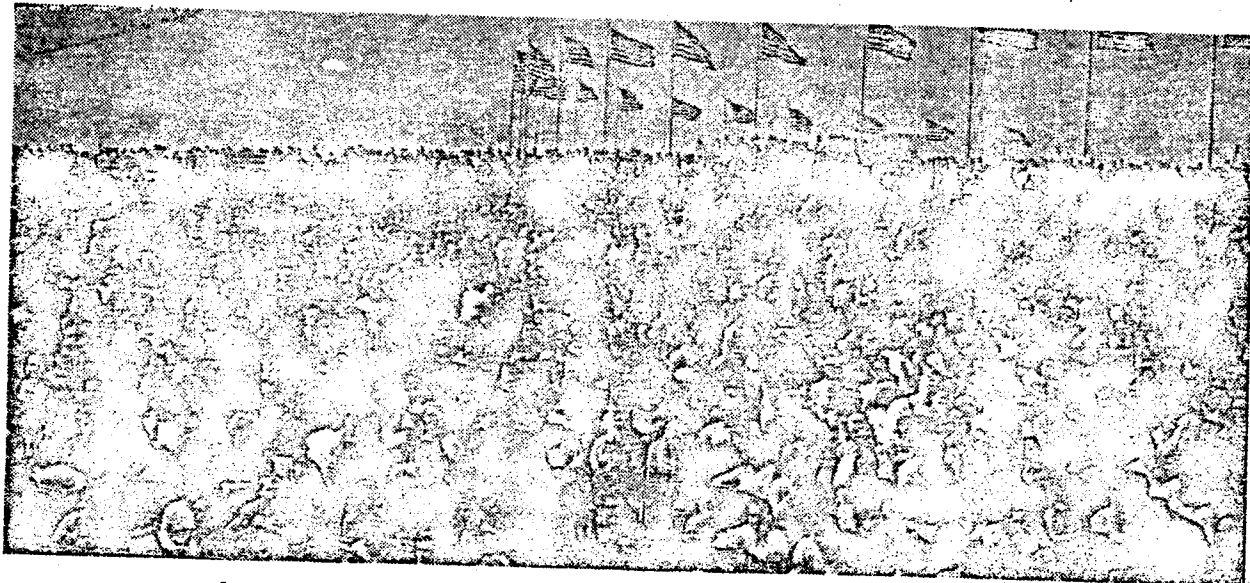

VENCEREMOS

Castro's few guerrilla bands in the remote hills of Cuba deserve comparatively little credit for the overthrow of President Batista.

The major forces that brought communism to Cuba were subversion within the national government plus massive 'civil disobedience' in the streets of the major cities.

CUBA TODAY

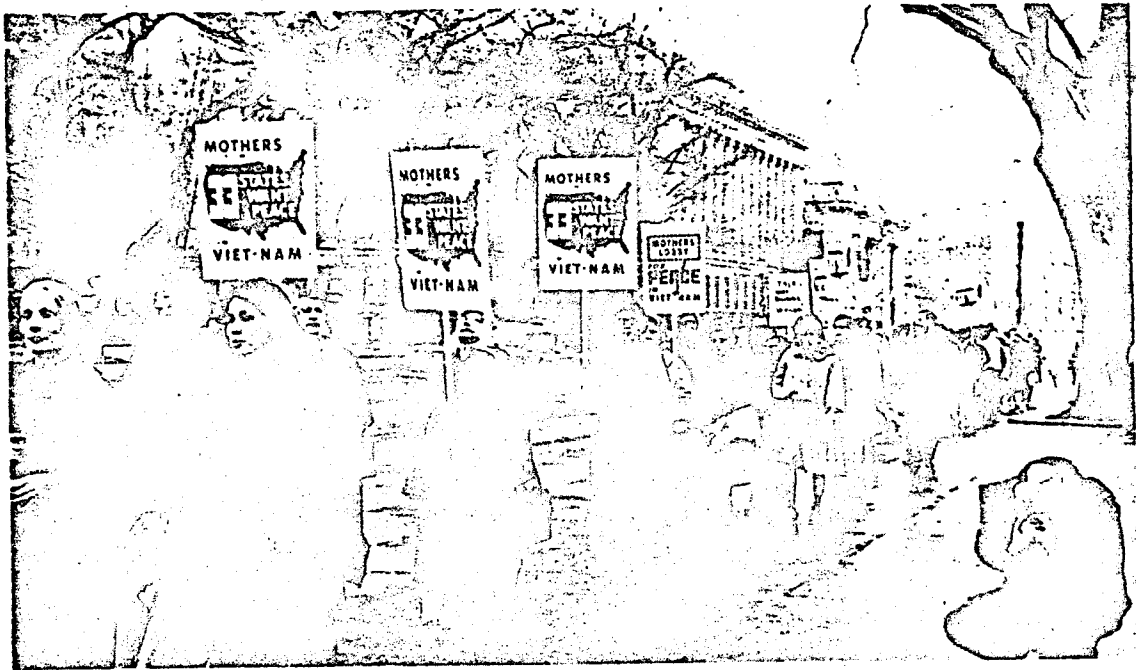

RIGHT: As it really is: Except for the 'people's militia, the streets are usually deserted. For ordinary citizens to be found on the street is to risk arrest and long hours of interrogation.

Most of our readers are familiar with the United Nations' Association. This is the largest and most influential organization promoting adoption of one world government, one world law, one world court and one world army. It is nearly saturated with communists and Fabian Socialists.

WILPF demonstrate before the White House, February 10.

Vice-President Hubert H. Humphrey took time out from his busy schedule to speak at WILPF's luncheon for members of Congress January 27, at the conclusion of our 9th annual Legislative Seminar. At left, Amelia Boynton from Selma, Ala.

Among the more active left-wing women's organizations is WILPF (Women's International League for Peace and Freedom) They promote the straight commie line: Abolish HCUA, unilateral disarmament, peace at any price. etc.

Their recent activities include picketing the White House for U.S. withdrawal from Viet Nam and acting as host for a congratulatory speech by the Vice President.
