Nixon Bent on Law-and-Order Court

By Jack Anderson

President Nixon is determined to reshape the Supreme Court and let his critics be damned.

No other subject brings his blood to such a quick boil. In the privacy of his oval office. he has used some hot terms to express what he thinks of his court critics in the Senate and the press. Once, he spit out an obscenity to suggest what the American Bar Association ornate office last week. could do with its criticisms. Shocked aides had never heard the President use such a word before.

As the President sees the issue, the Supreme Court's emphasis on civil liberities at the expense of public order has created a permissive atmosphere, which has encouraged criminals and dissidents. This lenient attitude, he feels, has led to a breakdown of law and order.

He intends, therefore, to fill the court vacancies with judges whose law-and-order views are perfectly clear. He has emphasized to aides that he doesn't want to risk appointing another Earl Warren, constitutional views Eisenhower named him to the up in a row on a couch.

appointments to the court," he New has huffed in private.

To avoid losing another Sen- | been more than 270 days since | suggested names. She asked President decided to leak in- press conference. formation on the nominees he was considering. He hoped to the record" determine from these trial bal- exasperatedly. loons which ones would burst and which ones would float.

Great Leak

The Great Leak was assigned to Attorney General John Mitchell, who summoned 14 favored reporters into his

By ones and twos, the invited reporters sauntered in from The Associated Press, United Press International, New York Times, Washington Post, Washington Star, Los Angeles Times, Wall Street Journal, Hearst Newspapers, Chicago Tribune, National Observer, Newseek, Time and NBC.

The only holdover from ex-Attorney General Ramsey Clark's era, a white-coated black bartender, served up served up highballs, beer and gin (but no vodka). He was assisted occasionally by Deputy Attorney General Richard Kleindienst, who wandered around offering drinks. Mitchell's press aides, like so many see-hear-speakwere unknown when President no-evil monkeys, were lined but barred them from quoting Mitchell blamed liberal and But Mr. Nixon is convinced labor-critics for resisting court that Senate liberals and the changes, but dodged most er's Nina "Eastern press" are trying to other questions. The reporters thwart his court reorganiza- tried in vain to get the confer- linist Roman Totenberg, noted tion. "They will attack all my ence put on the record. The that the American Bar Assoham pointed out that it had to some of President Nixon's

"Why can't we put this on

"We don't run this Department for Mr. Fred Graham of the New York Times" Mitchell retorted, blowing an angry cloud from his pipe.

Unsubdued, Graham shot back: "Why are we here? Let's get this on the record."

Newsweek's Bob Shogan thing except qualifications. asked a rambling question about whether there might "possibly" or "probably" be more nominees. Mitchell petulantly asked Shogan to define "probably" and the words "possibly."

Naughty Word

The Los Angeles Times' Ron Ostrow raised a question about a meeting that the White House had already announced dealing with the Supreme Court. But despite the White House announcement, Mitchell querulously challenged whether there had ever been such a meeting.

They were put under wraps, which allowed them to report on some of the proceedings anyone but anonymous "administrative sources.'

Then the National Observ-Totenberg, the brassy daughter of famed vio-York Times' Fred Gra- ciation had not taken kindly land from the exploiters.

ate showdown, however, the Mtichell had held an open Mitchell point blank: "Did the" President say-the ABA?"

Blushing furiously, Mitchell Graham asked mumbled something about ladies being present, although the question was asked by a lady. "The President," he said," "doesn't use words like that about organizations to which he belongs."

In any case, added Mitchell, "it's none of the ABA's damn business," to comment on any-

Asked what sort of philowr sophical balance the courtshould have, he replied with a straight face: "Oh, about eight to one" in Mr. Nixon's favor.

Washington Whirl

Indian Trading-The ways. have been greased for 55,000, Alaskan Indians, Eskimos and Aleuts to get 40 million acres, of Alaskan land under a native claims bill now awaiting. congressional action, final This would seem to be a welldeserved settlement for the natives who have lived on the land for 6,000 years. But the behind-the-scenes lobbying has been done by greedy Alaskan land speculators and oil mo. guls. They plan to hornswoggle the natives, who have an average fourth-grade education, into turning the land over to them as soon as the bill passes. Conservationists have wisely urged land-use amendments to the bill to protect both the natives and the

Bell-McClure Syndicate