

Dear Chris,

5/13/81

Because almost the entire so-called critical community prostituted itself at the time of the HSCA's disinformational activities there is virtually no critical literature. There were some stories in the Times and Post for which I was responsible, contemporaneous; but the committee bought the Times off with favored leaks and there was a limit to what one paper, the Post, could carry.

It is not possible for me to spend any time in such endeavors. I've just returned from the third surgery in the past six months. I'm having artery problems in addition to those with the veins going back to 1975.

What time remains for me I will devote to the work I want to do, to the extent that it is possible for me, and I won't be able to undertake projects others would like to have undertaken.

To bad that all those geniuses were so stupid and so blind and so unwilling to face any realities, all in the vain belief that if you stir the pot long enough it will boil over.

Nobody asked, "On whom?"

I'm sorry that it and the many stupidities like it can't now be wiped out.

However, from time to time it is possible to do something if there is news value. I expect a story in the near future.

Sincerely,

GRISCOM MORGAN

Dear Hal:

I have not seen a real critique and discussion of the Congressional Committee's Investigation of the Assassination of President Kennedy. Would you list whatever is worth looking into on this? It seems to me remarkable that the subject has not had significant public protest at the way it was conducted.

Sincerely,

Gris
