

One Dead In 'Territorial War'

Police Hunt Gang Members

MARSHALLTON, Del. (AP)—State police said Sunday warrants were out for the arrest of five members on "The Pagans" motorcycle gang in connection with "a territorial war" which left one man dead and four hospitalized with gunshot wounds.

Police said Boyd D. Lewis, 39, of Newark, Del., identified as president of a local "Pagans" chapter, was killed Saturday night in the "three-to-four-minute" gunbattle here.

An autopsy disclosed Lewis was hit 11 times with three different kinds of ammunition, detectives said.

A member of a rival gang, "The Drifters" of the Chester, Pa., area, identified as Gary Donwell, 27, of Bear, Del., was held Sunday in lieu of $6,500 bond on first-degree murder charges, police said.

A detective sergeant said the "Pagans," in what was "evidentially an isolated incident," raided a home in a middle-class residential area where the gunbattle was waged with rifles, shotguns and assorted handguns.

The ensuing shootout "between 10 to 20 men" killed Lewis, a Pagan; wounded three Drifters and one Pagan and led to the arrest of Donwell, a Drifter, police said.

While declining to identify those men sought, the sergeant said all five were wanted as accessories after the fact and material witnesses to murder.

Two Drifters, Cara Miller and John Bustart, both 32 of Marshallton, were hospitalized in critical condition in Wilmington, police said, while a club member, Vaughn O. Corringer Jr., 29, of Wilmington, was in serious condition.

Police added a Pagan, Lawrence Fisher, 26, of Wilmington, was also in serious condition.

"Four or five weapons have been recovered," police said.
