was mostly engaged in its normal practices also such as valuing the "fitness" of its officers, not only in their performance of official duties - but in how "suitably" and "desirably" they and their wives were "representatives of their country and their country as a team" (Parsons - Pocket 9). We find non-officially the Navy also reserved the right to approve or disapprove their marriages.
An affirmative opinion was most important in failing to get the written permission of the C. O. before from falling in love with and marrying the woman of his choice.
