

Dear Bill,

7/12/95

Read your 7/10 and the interesting clippings with it while Lil did ~~some~~ grocery shopping. With a few minutes before supper I at least begin to reply.

Inside takes up an entire file box, I think 14 solid inches. And I've added to it and have to integrate that. The first part of sort-of biographical in that I report the learning experiences that to the degree I was prepared did prepare me for the work I've done. Some or most of that part has been retyped. The former student who was doing that cannot continue, the one to whom she was to have given that work has been silent for at least six weeks, I've left a message for her on the answering machine, so I do not even know if that work still exists! On further retyping of it, I think the Mailer book now takes precedence. What I wrote on Newman's book before this developed is about ^{less than} half retyped and I've been promised the completion of that by the end of next week. The girl doing that has a full-time job. And after I read it there will be corrections. But I'll have diskettes of that. Already arranged for, diskettes bought.

You may find that the "old-fashioned Liberal sort" like Schulman were immobilized by the Warren appointment. But should he want me by phone, that would be fine.

I'll send you what I have of that Ruby psychiatric report.

The way it works if there is a decent one with a genuine concern, take Dodd for an example, they become pretty much captives of the staff. Note this in the article when you read it. Russell came to realize it.

They are always too busy to fully inform themselves and then the self-seekers and nuts pour in on them and confuse and mislead them even more.

I'm glad there is a belated stink about Leni, who did get away with it all.

I'd read about those Swiss sharpies in a mailing from a Jewish organization. And they are getting away with it, stealing what Hitler stole and not returning it to those from whom he stole it or their heirs. Legally, too, as you lawyers say. We'd see to it sometimes.

Chow call.
