

Dear Bill,

9/19/95

I'm not enclosing Cesar's letter which came today but I do enclose my response because of what you said in your previous letter. He went into detail about how busy he was and the tightness of his schedule and I do believe every word of it. He has always been that way. However, it was six months ago that he agreed to do the press conference. He then without speaking to me wanted to shift it to COPA and he still does. I found out not from him but from Dave or from Jerry.

That Pearce review of the Uingler gibberish is a fine one. Thanks. And the Jenkins distribe against JFK pegged to his son's new magazine, coming from a man with four short legs and an oink, explains the institutional Mastiness and dishonesty of the WSJ. He is well qualified to be its editorial-page director.

I think that for Colin Powell personally it will be a very bad idea to run for the presidency. From the little I've caught on TV he is handling himself and expressing himself very well and is laying the basis for popular support. But the job today is an impossible one and he'll ruin his reputation, in all probability, if he had such a Congress as we now suffer to contend with.

They are so irrational so dishonest and so determined and vocal they may well be helping Clinton.

Somehow I forgot that Sawyer article in Vanity Fair. I found the one on Uingler to be very good.

You expect to see more censorship. The gathering into fewer corporate hands of TV and other elements of the media alone guarantees that.

This morning, except for wrapping it up, I finished the second chapter I'll insert into the Newman ms. It has grown a bit lately. But Dave sent me some very definitive pages from Dino Frigiano's Eyeball to Eyeball on the U-2. He was in the CIA's National Photographic Interpretation Center.

Want to clean the mail up before supper.

Best,
Hank

I could have reminded him and perhaps should have that he heads what is supposed to be an assassination research center and with all the crap he reads after six months he has not read one with new information, new fact. His letter says that on the subway he had just begun to read it and was in the foreword. After all that time! Six months after agreeing to hold a press conference on it, too,
