

Dwar Dave,

11/12/97

I did not find the original of the Newman epilogue, nor did I find the original of the Newman manuscript. This is a copy of the copy of the epilogue and the pagination can begin with 1 or you can continue with the paging on your copy of the original manuscript.

If I could identify a Newman disk, then of course we could get a consistent numbering of pages, perhaps. But they are strange to me and I have no method of any systematic storing of them.

I will be writing further about a couple of other writings but I want to discuss them with Jerry first. I have a short one on the book by the former KGB in Mexico City, Mechiporenkov, and a longer one, belatedly on NORTAL ERROR.

But I have nobody to do the retyping and this means that if I ~~can~~ get any copies around they will be copies of the ~~rough~~ rough draft. Which is rough!

And I can't begin to do the copying or to pay for all that xeroxing or take the time from other work to do all that packaging. So, I'll have to consider alternative means and that is what I want to get Jerry's opinion on,

Maybe he can come over later today.

Best,

Harold
