On his first press conference in five months he just one he allowed to be televised in more than a year — Nixon faced harsh, frontal, tough questioning as he stood on the full bright Pacific scene at San Clemente at 11:30 a.m. local time and for 50 minutes answered nothing but with many new frontal thrusts on his counter-attack. It was a bold intellectual ~~Pearl~~ Panzer blitz against which the press could do nothing.

He was vindictive while mostly tense; candid in his lessons as he shook in nervousness; paranoid as his tone quivered, yet he ~~was~~ cooled new and ever-lower bombardments at his "enemies."

With Nixon long aware of such performances, Nixon was ~~as all~~ virtuoso. It is doubtful if any other American political figure could have pulled it off. It is now doubtful that anyone would have tried. Certainly no one would have been as capable of being lambasted by it.

Not since Hitler first ~~of~~ espoused the big lie as a method and means of coping with opposition has an American president practiced it with this complacency when he didn't evade or answer a question at all. Nixon just lied. The only alternative was based on the assumption of total moral ~~and~~ immorality ~~after~~ by everyone else. Ceb, beginning with his own loyal daughter ~~and~~ left with direct ~~of~~ quotes)