

Two Congressmen Inspect San Clemente

San Clemente

Two members of the House Appropriations Committee spent more than three hours yesterday inspecting the Western White House at San Clemente and said afterward that government expenditures— for the most part—were justified.

In a related action, the Orange county grand jury announced that it did not intend to pursue any investigation into the tax assessments placed on the estate.

Representatives Edward L. Roybal (Dem Calif.) and Jack Edwards (Rep Ala.) and newsmen after the tour sat at the President's invitation. They were taken through all the facilities including the office complex on the grounds of Mr. Nixon's private residence bedroom.

FIRST

The tour is believed to be the first inspection of government-financed facilities there since the controversy over improvement costs developed several months ago.

My general impression is that the money which was spent for security was money well spent," Roybal said.

He added, in response to a question, that money used for landscaping around the residence "was justified" a term he also used in regard to a bulletproof windscreen around the swimming pool.

A $5000 loan for furniture for the President's den also was supported by Roybal, who said, "I have no objection if all employees of the government should have the right to work."

Mr. Roybal also noted that the government should be paid, such as money spent for esthetics. He also raised the question, "How much protection is enough?" in regard to security expenditures.

Edwards echoed Roybal's assessment of the reported $2.4 million spent on the San Clemente residence.

The grand jury's statement left the issue squarely up to the members of the Orange county Assessment Appeals Board which was asked last week by the California State Board of Equalization to look into the assessment, now placed at $1.57 million.

The request came by unanimous vote of the four Democratic members of the state board who said they took the action to "get it off our backs."
