

Everything the Watergate buggers wanted to know about Larry O'Brien.

The nation's leading political pro has written a memoir so candid that whatever the wiretappers were after is bound to be in it — and then some.

In NO FINAL VICTORIES, Larry O'Brien, who organized every one of John F. Kennedy's Senate and Presidential campaigns, reveals the strategy and tactics of Kennedy's long quest for the White House. But the former Democratic National Chairman is not all politics. He also reveals the dirty laundry — literally a week's supply which the candidate once spilled in an airport lobby.

He tells how Robert F. Kennedy's last, tragic victory in 1968 California primary was engineered. And how Bob Kennedy got into a fistfight in a Georgetown park.

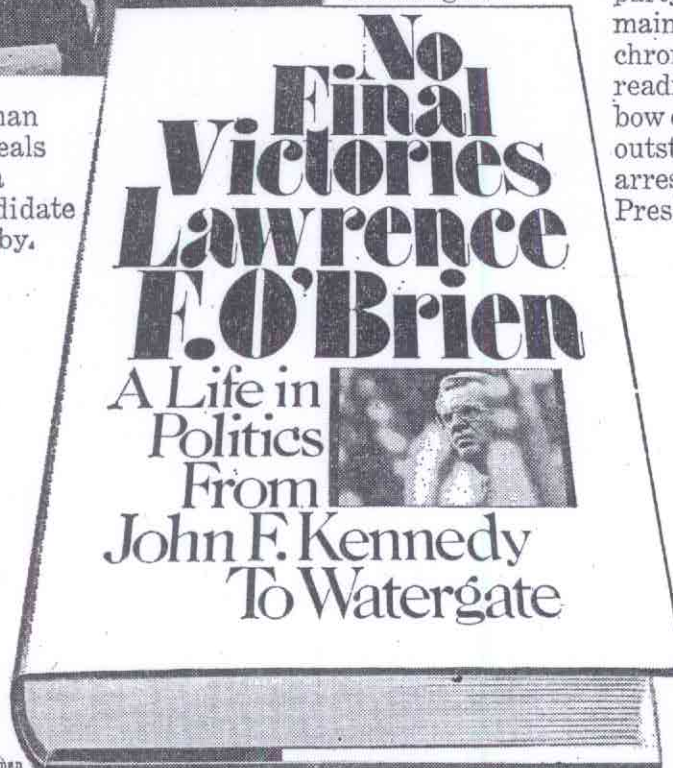

He shows us the Johnson administration close-up, from his vantage point inside the Cabinet. And he shows us LBJ close-up, sneaking hot dogs and candy at a ballgame while Lady Bird wasn't looking.

He tells about working for every Democratic President and Presidential candidate for two decades... why he's now sorry he worked for McGovern... and why he would advise Ted Kennedy not to run in 1976.

Remarking on the "eye-opening documents and letters" included, Publishers Weekly says: "Candid but never mean-spirited, O'Brien comes across as a deeply dedicated party man who is far more than a main-chancer. Throughout his chronicle he makes compelling reading, but on LBJ's decision to bow out, and on Watergate, he is outstanding. He also offers some arresting views on the 1976 Presidential campaign."
