

March 12, 1998

Dear Harold:

Following up on a conversation that we had a few days ago regarding literary agents, I have cruised the Internet and found a few literary agents' home pages (advertising spaces). I made copies of them and am sending them to you for your consideration. I am not advocating for any agent included in this bundle. One agent did not have a postal address (Campbell McMath) so I solicited an address with an E-mail message. This agent's representative replied with an address and a hint of interest. Enclosed is the communication for your review.

I had the opportunity to speak on the telephone with Jerry McKnight last night. He has agreed to act as a go-between for electronic receipt, printing of your manuscripts, and transmittal to you. This will save time and money when getting your documents back to you if it works as desired.

Jerry indicated a keen desire to read the current version of "Hersh-it!" which I will transmit via E-mail to test the concept of transferring files to him for his printing and transmittal to you.

Until the next we speak or write,

Clay O.