Dear Hal:

In regards to my letter of 3 February, I suppose it's more just plain curiosity than anything else and therefore, not too important. Minox has a rather limited use and is rather an expensive investment for the average person, unless he is involved in an expensive enterprise. The Ortho type film is used in copying documents and I was wondering what was on the Minox film.

Thanks for your letter of 6 February and I hope that you are feeling better soon.

Sincerely,

Emory

Dear Emory,

Relet 9: no reason to believe the Paines could not afford a Minx or, that with their travelling, they'd not enjoy it.

I have found a Raikin interview, sent it to Paul and he will copy and send you a copy. It adds a few dimensions and contains no reference to what you know Raikin said.

It is interesting as a further official interest in the Oswald well-being when he was not worried and made no efforts to help himself.

Because it also indicates that he hadn't the means of going anywhere where once he landed, I take it as meaning, among other things, that he expected assistance to be waiting for him. And, it had to be, as it was, officially arranged.

After you read it and, perhaps, if you can locate the story the NYTimes reporter may have written, I'd welcome your opinions.

Sincerely,
