

LA FACE News 6/11/68

J. Edgar Hoover seeks Garrison before end

Robert Kennedy, who would investigate the assassination of his brother, reportedly will be written about in a book that would vigorously probe the role of those of the visit was to assure Garrison that his public utterances, Robert Kennedy, very firmly held a private view.

Garrison asked, "Why Senator Kennedy felt it necessary to address his dissent, particularly in the same way answered, "The same way that there are no lines between him and the White House."

Garrison pointed out that John Kennedy had not been assassinated after his election. That was proof, Garrison added, that the presidency offered no immunity from an assassin's bullet.

Garrison said that the lesson of the assassination is very clear. Any man of choice to dominate the world, he said, had also to appear to be in a position to do it will have to stand alone or in the shadow of an American city.

Garrison said that the only man who could stand alone and on a pedestal against the assassins and the disclosure of the role played by the Central Intelligence Agency.

Garrison frankly and dispassionately the various incidents between Garrison and Robert Kennedy's representatives. Over a period of several weeks, two different emissaries had arrived in New Orleans. Each had sought out Jim Garrison, each stated that he was carrying a message from Robert Kennedy, each was known by Garrison to be associated with Robert Kennedy, each carried almost the identical message.

Garrison continued with the conviction that the life was more important to him than anything it would be by his public disclosure of the known facts.

Robert Kennedy had said that if he lost the California primary he would withdraw from the presidential campaign. Clearly that would be no reason to kill him unless he won. Minutes after his victory was assured, he was forming he was executed.

Hannas, Clark, the attorney general of the United States, and the FBI.

R.I. Kennedy seeks truth

Robert Kennedy, who would investigate the assassination of his brother, reportedly will be written about in a book that would vigorously probe the role of those of the visit was to assure Garrison that his public utterances, Robert Kennedy, very firmly held a private view.

Garrison asked, "Why Senator Kennedy felt it necessary to address his dissent, particularly in the same way answered, "The same way that there are no lines between him and the White House."

Garrison pointed out that John Kennedy had not been assassinated after his election. That was proof, Garrison added, that the presidency offered no immunity from an assassin's bullet.

Garrison said that the lesson of the assassination is very clear. Any man of choice to dominate the world, he said, had also to appear to be in a position to do it will have to stand alone or in the shadow of an American city.

Garrison said that the only man who could stand alone and on a pedestal against the assassins and the disclosure of the role played by the Central Intelligence Agency.

Garrison frankly and dispassionately the various incidents between Garrison and Robert Kennedy's representatives. Over a period of several weeks, two different emissaries had arrived in New Orleans. Each had sought out Jim Garrison, each stated that he was carrying a message from Robert Kennedy, each was known by Garrison to be associated with Robert Kennedy, each carried almost the identical message.

Garrison continued with the conviction that the life was more important to him than anything it would be by his public disclosure of the known facts.

Robert Kennedy had said that if he lost the California primary he would withdraw from the presidential campaign. Clearly that would be no reason to kill him unless he won. Minutes after his victory was assured, he was forming he was executed.

Hannas, Clark, the attorney general of the United States, and the FBI.

Garrison pointed out that John Kennedy had not been assassinated after his election. That was proof, Garrison added, that the presidency offered no immunity from an assassin's bullet.

Garrison said that the lesson of the assassination is very clear. Any man of choice to dominate the world, he said, had also to appear to be in a position to do it will have to stand alone or in the shadow of an American city.

Garrison said that the only man who could stand alone and on a pedestal against the assassins and the disclosure of the role played by the Central Intelligence Agency.

Garrison frankly and dispassionately the various incidents between Garrison and Robert Kennedy's representatives. Over a period of several weeks, two different emissaries had arrived in New Orleans. Each had sought out Jim Garrison, each stated that he was carrying a message from Robert Kennedy, each was known by Garrison to be associated with Robert Kennedy, each carried almost the identical message.

Garrison continued with the conviction that the life was more important to him than anything it would be by his public disclosure of the known facts.

Robert Kennedy had said that if he lost the California primary he would withdraw from the presidential campaign. Clearly that would be no reason to kill him unless he won. Minutes after his victory was assured, he was forming he was executed.

Hannas, Clark, the attorney general of the United States, and the FBI.

R.I. Kennedy seeks truth

Robert Kennedy, who would investigate the assassination of his brother, reportedly will be written about in a book that would vigorously probe the role of those of the visit was to assure Garrison that his public utterances, Robert Kennedy, very firmly held a private view.

Garrison asked, "Why Senator Kennedy felt it necessary to address his dissent, particularly in the same way answered, "The same way that there are no lines between him and the White House."

Garrison pointed out that John Kennedy had not been assassinated after his election. That was proof, Garrison added, that the presidency offered no immunity from an assassin's bullet.

Garrison said that the lesson of the assassination is very clear. Any man of choice to dominate the world, he said, had also to appear to be in a position to do it will have to stand alone or in the shadow of an American city.

Garrison said that the only man who could stand alone and on a pedestal against the assassins and the disclosure of the role played by the Central Intelligence Agency.

Garrison frankly and dispassionately the various incidents between Garrison and Robert Kennedy's representatives. Over a period of several weeks, two different emissaries had arrived in New Orleans. Each had sought out Jim Garrison, each stated that he was carrying a message from Robert Kennedy, each was known by Garrison to be associated with Robert Kennedy, each carried almost the identical message.

Garrison continued with the conviction that the life was more important to him than anything it would be by his public disclosure of the known facts.

Robert Kennedy had said that if he lost the California primary he would withdraw from the presidential campaign. Clearly that would be no reason to kill him unless he won. Minutes after his victory was assured, he was forming he was executed.

Hannas, Clark, the attorney general of the United States, and the FBI.

Garrison pointed out that John Kennedy had not been assassinated after his election. That was proof, Garrison added, that the presidency offered no immunity from an assassin's bullet.

Garrison said that the lesson of the assassination is very clear. Any man of choice to dominate the world, he said, had also to appear to be in a position to do it will have to stand alone or in the shadow of an American city.

Garrison said that the only man who could stand alone and on a pedestal against the assassins and the disclosure of the role played by the Central Intelligence Agency.

Garrison frankly and dispassionately the various incidents between Garrison and Robert Kennedy's representatives. Over a period of several weeks, two different emissaries had arrived in New Orleans. Each had sought out Jim Garrison, each stated that he was carrying a message from Robert Kennedy, each was known by Garrison to be associated with Robert Kennedy, each carried almost the identical message.

Garrison continued with the conviction that the life was more important to him than anything it would be by his public disclosure of the known facts.

Robert Kennedy had said that if he lost the California primary he would withdraw from the presidential campaign. Clearly that would be no reason to kill him unless he won. Minutes after his victory was assured, he was forming he was executed.

Hannas, Clark, the attorney general of the United States, and the FBI.