Dear Dave,

In the course of writing the Posner book I established a file for what I would add later, for what I got after I wrote what it relates to, and of small things, little mistakes, like names he did not have straight, + might want to use later, in a separate chapter. Having cleared other work up I looked for that file and small as my office is cannot locate it. I knew exactly where I kept it. It was in two folders. Only one is now visible and have I looked! The only thing I can think of is that a student who was helping me from time to time misfiled it. Any filing would be mis-filing! It was atop my desk organizer with all else for the book, including chapters done. So, if it is not too much trouble and if I remember correctly you did and want me something like that, I'll appreciate a copy. As I would of anything sent you that it would be OK to use.

Gary tells me that he has been in touch with you, sorrowful because he has only enemies on both sides. I do not believe him on that. If he were at all sorrowful he'd have answered my letter before I had the book, asking for the sources on what he said about me not given in the book. When I read it later I knew he would be embarrassed if he told me the truth. I've not heard from him. He did not send me the early copy he promised nor did he send me the promotional material I wanted as a record for history.

The book is so deliberately, ~~consciously~~ conscientiously dishonest I do not believe how he represents himself to you.

And as far as any regrets are concerned, Doubleday has paid a big sum for an Anchor paperback reprint due in August.

How many apologies has he told you he made for the nasty, dirty things he did - for money? All those many dishonest things.

Any expression of regret for what he has done to our history, for all the people he has deceived and misled?

If he feels that nobody has any use for him, that is as it should be.

We hope you have a good holiday season,

David
