

Church to Urge Disclosure Of C.I.A. Report in August

NYTimes By NICHOLAS M. HORROCK JUL 16 1975

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 15—public without the approval of the Senate. Mr. Tower on the other hand, said it would take a full Senate vote whether to make the material public and that "we prefer that responsibility be on the full Senate."

Senator Church explained that the variance between his remarks and Mr. Tower's stemmed from the fact that the Texan was referring to an earlier plan. Mr. Church said that under the pressure of trying to complete the report, he believes the plan to present it to the Senate had to be abandoned.

Mr. Church said that the committee had not decided whether to include material gathered on the reported C.I.A. intervention in Chile in its interim report on assassinations or to make it part of a general report covering covert operations.

Some press reports have speculated that the agency might have been involved in a kidnapping and assassination of Gene Rene Schneider, commander of the Chilean Army, in October, 1970. According to authoritative intelligence sources, there was indication that the C.I.A. was dealing with members of a group that later kidnapped and killed the general, but, as one put it, "I don't see this as an assassination matter."

Mr. Church, an Idaho Democrat, said the committee has the power to make the report public without the approval of the Senate. Mr. Tower on the other hand, said it would take a full Senate vote whether to make the material public and that "we prefer that responsibility be on the full Senate."

Senator Church explained that the variance between his remarks and Mr. Tower's stemmed from the fact that the Texan was referring to an earlier plan. Mr. Church said that under the pressure of trying to complete the report, he believes the plan to present it to the Senate had to be abandoned.

Mr. Church said that the committee had not decided whether to include material gathered on the reported C.I.A. intervention in Chile in its interim report on assassinations or to make it part of a general report covering covert operations.

Some press reports have speculated that the agency might have been involved in a kidnapping and assassination of Gene Rene Schneider, commander of the Chilean Army, in October, 1970. According to authoritative intelligence sources, there was indication that the C.I.A. was dealing with members of a group that later kidnapped and killed the general, but, as one put it, "I don't see this as an assassination matter."

Mr. Church, an Idaho Democrat, said the committee has the power to make the report