Dear Jerry,

When I gave Hil your greeting after we spoke tonight, she asked me what we had talked about and I said your Times article. She said something you had not told me, that you had said there is something in it that I will not like. If this is the case, you are right not to have discussed it with me, for your writing must say what you think. You should not tailor your view to satisfy anyone.

I offer this added unsolicited advice: it should be both accurate and relevant.
